THE STANDARD ENGINE.

usually operating on benzine, is supplied in both stationary and marine patterns, and there are hundreds of these Engines at work in the Commonwealth, both on land and sea. At sea, where life and property are at stake, nearly all the boats are fitted with "Standard" Engines—in fact, timid persons might naturally be excused if they thought twice before going out to sea in a boat which was not equipped with a "Standard" Engine. The "Standard" Engines are largely used by our various Governments, public bodies, and companies throughout Australia and the Pacific Islands. Fishermen, whose calling is at present necessarily precarious and uncertain, reduce their risks and minimise their discomforts very considerably by installing "Standard" Engines.

We are experts in the REPAIRING of Oil Engines, and also keep a large stock of Ellison Batteries, Mag Seton, Spark Coils, and other Oil Engine Sundries.

THE ALLINSON HONOUR.

BY HAROLD BINDLOSS.

This was far from heroic, but Andrew laughed; the minor weaknesses of human nature seldom jarred on him. "I think," he suggested, "you might, for a change, call him the swine. It's a term we sometimes use, and it sounds grosser than the other. The hogs I've seen running in the Ontario bush were thin and not repulsive."

"I'll allow it's foolish; but when I think of that man sitting down to his dinner with a waiter behind him and studying the menu, I sure get mad. Can't you see him picking out the dollar dishes, on the European plan? Canvas-backs and such, if they're in season."

"They wouldn't give him much canvas-back for a dollar," Graham objected.

"That doesn't count. The point is—where does he get those dollars from?"

"I'm afraid he has made a few of them out of us," said Andrew. "He has got some more out of the Red Butte shareholders, though I'm glad to think that supply will be stopped. Anyhow, our first business is to find the cache."

"That's so," assented Carnally, who threw some branches on the fire. "We'll try again at sun-up. Though it makes you feel easier now and then, talking doesn't do much good."

A few minutes later they were all asleep, and when day broke Andrew and Carnally descended a steep, snow-covered bank below the neck. Their search proved unsuccessful, and they were very silent after they returned to camp in the evening. Next morning Graham, who gave them a very small bannock for breakfast, threw an empty flour bag into the snow.

"Boys," he said gravely, "you have got to find the cache to-day."

They had, however, not been forgotten while they journeyed through the wilds. Frobisher thought of them now and then and his daughter more often; indeed, her mind dwelt a good deal on Andrew after he left and she found herself looking forward eagerly to his return. She spent some weeks in an American city with her father, but its gaieties had less attraction for her than usual, and she was glad when they went back for a while to the Lake of Shadows. On the day after her arrival she drove across the ice to the Landing and inquired at a store where news circulated whether anything had been heard of the Allinson expedition. The proprietor had nothing to tell her, but while she spoke to him a man crossed the floor, and looking round she saw with annoyance that it was Mappin. She left while he made his purchases, but he joined her when she was putting some parcels into the sleigh, and did not seem daunted by the coldness of her manner.

"I didn't know you were coming back so soon," he said.

"Didn't you?" she asked indifferently. "When my father had finished his business we suddenly made up our minds to leave, without consulting Mrs. Denton. I suppose that explains your ignorance."

"You're smart," he rejoined. "As soon as you're ready to receive people I must make my call."

It was getting dark, but the lights from the store window fell upon his face, and Geraldine saw a glitter in his eyes. She thought he had meant to defy her.

"You are excused, so far as I am concerned," she said uncompromisingly.

Mappin stood silent for a moment or two, looking hard at her, and she felt half afraid of him.

"I dare say you would sooner see Allinson; but that's a pleasure you may find deferred. You didn't get much news of him just now."

"I've no doubt you heard my ask to, it though there were two teamsters waiting to buy things, who had the good manners to keep away."

"I did," he answered coolly; "that's the kind of man I am. I don't let chances pass."

Geraldine knew he would make unscrupulous use of those he seized, but his candour had its effect on her. He was correctly overbearing, but there was force in the man, and she grew uneasy. Though she shrank from him, something primitive in her owned his power; unless she roused herself to fight, he might break her will.

One could hardly consider it an admirable one, she said, getting into the sleigh. "However, it's too cold to stand talking."

Mappin was obliged to step back when she started the team, and she drove off in some confusion glad to escape, but feeling that she had run away. It had seemed the safest course, though she did not think she was a coward. Then as the team trotted across the frozen lake she remembered Mappin's curious tone when he had spoken of Andrew Allinson. He had suggested with an unpleasant hint of satisfaction that Andrew's return might be delayed, and she grew troubled as she thought of it. Still, she reasoned, since no news had reached the Landing Mappin could know nothing about the matter, and the men with whom she had left him were accustomed to the trails. Dismissing the subject, she urged the horses and drew the buck driving robe close about her. It was very cold and she shivered as she watched how Andrew and his comrades were faring in the north.

Some days later she met Mrs. Gresham at the post-office, and leaving the building with her inquired about her husband. Gerald ne thought she looked anxious.

"He's a little behind time, but soft snow or storms might delay the party," she said.

"Then he mentioned a time when you could expect him?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Graham. "He warned me that he might be a week late, but they thought out the journey very carefully, because it was a question of carrying enough food."

"You mean that helped to fix the time of their return?"

"Of course. They could only get stores at a Hudson's Bay factory, and they couldn't take a large quantity. That means they knew within a week or so when they must reach the provision depots that were to be made for them north of the mine."

"I understand," said Geraldine. "They wouldn't delay when they came to the depots, except, perhaps, for a day's rest. I suppose all the food was taken up?"

"Oh, yes; I saw the packers leave and come down. They were good bushmen, and one of them knew the country. He made the caches at the places fixed upon."

"Then the expedition should be quite safe," said Geraldine cheerfully; but when she left Mrs. Graham she grew thoughtful.

Andrew was late, and Geraldine saw that delay might be dangerous. The men would lose no time in coming south, because, considering the difficulty of transport, the margin of provisions would not be large. Nothing but a serious accident would detain them, which was disconcerting to reflect upon. Then she reasoned that their stores would be nearly exhausted when they reached the depots, and her mind dwelt upon the point, because it was essential that they should obtain fresh supplies. She felt uneasy as she remembered a remark of Mappin's, which she did not think he had made casually. There had been a significant grimness in his manner when he had spoken of Allinson. After all, however, it was possible that there was no ground for anxiety; the prospectors might turn up in the next few days.

As there was no news of them, Geraldine drove to the settlement one evening and called on Mrs. Graham, whom she found seriously disturbed.

"A man came down from the mine this morning, and my husband hadn't arrived," she said. "I'm afraid something has gone wrong."

"What can have gone wrong?" Geraldine asked.

"I don't know; I've been thinking about it all the last few days, and trying not to be afraid. Of course, they would be safe if they reached the food depots."

"Yes," said Geraldine thoughtfully; "those depots seem important. But as nobody has turned up I don't think you need be troubled. The worst would be if one came back alone."

Mrs. Graham did not seem much comforted when she left her, and Geraldine, driving home in the moonlight, tried to face the situation calmly. She admitted, without reserve for the first time, that she loved Andrew Allinson, and he was in danger. Something must be done to extricate him, and while she wondered how she ought to set about it her thoughts turned to Mappin. It dawned upon her that the new danger threatened the party, and this suggested that he had either allowed the men to involve themselves in unsuspected difficulties, or had brought the difficulties about. They had depended on him in some way, and he had betrayed them. Geraldine shuddered at the thought, but she roused herself, for it was obvious that if her suspicions were correct the man's designs must be combated. Mappin was strong and cunning, but she had ready wits and her lover's safety was at stake.

Next evening Mappin came to the house, and Geraldine carefully made some changes in her dress before she entered the drawing-room, where he was talking to Mrs. Denton. He rose with a challenging smile as she came in, and Geraldine was glad to feel that she was looking her best. It was humiliating to dress to please this man, but there was a struggle before her, and she must use such weapons as she had.

"I expect you're surprised to see me?" he said.

"Oh, no," said Geraldine; "I didn't doubt your boldness."

(To be continued.)

CURRENT LITERATURE.

POLLY PEACHUM.

The present generation of playgoers has probably never heard of "The Beggar's Opera," still less seen it performed, and yet for a hundred and fifty years it was one of the most popular productions of the English stage. It was written by John Gay, the poet, in 1727, in response to the advice of Pope and Swift that he should write a "Newgate Pastoral." Pope's villa at Twickenham was the scene of its composition, and when it was staged the following year at Lincoln's Inn Fields Theatre, it took the town by storm. As the wits of the time observed, it made Rich the manager gay, and Gay the author rich. Since then it has been repeatedly revived with success. Madame Vestris, as the hero, created a furore in 1848, while Sims Reeves scored another triumph at Covent Garden in 1878.

To us many of the local allusions are necessarily pointless, and the opera shows signs of age. Nevertheless it is a remarkable piece of work in the picaresque vein. Captain Macheath, the debonair, cynical, devil-may-care highwayman, and Polly Peachum, his devoted love, have become classical. The rest of the characters are more or less connected with the "high Toby" and the criminal life of the day. The simple airs are typical specimens of the old style of melody, and to a public sated with the sophisticated charms of the modern musical comedy, "The Beggar's Opera" might have an unexpected appeal.

On the first night the fate of the play was decided by Miss Lavinia Fenton, who made an irresistible heroine, and Mr. Charles E. Pearce tells us of her life in "Polly Peachum, being the Story of Lavinia Fenton, Duchess of Bolton." This lady was one of the band who have climbed from obscurity to fame via the stage, and have ultimately wedded a coronet. Her antecedents are unknown. She is said to have been the natural daughter of a naval lieutenant; but we first hear of her as a girl of 18, playing small parts for Rich in his Lincoln's Inn Fields Theatre. Apparently she showed promise, for Rich engaged her for the leading role in the Beggar's Opera for the colossal salary of 15s a week. The experiment was successful. The reception of the play was at first doubtful, but Polly's fresh winsomeness soon won the favour of the audience, and when kneeling she sang the plaintive air beginning—

Now ponder well, ye parents dear,
Oh, ponder well! be not severe—
So save a wretched wife;
For on the rope that hangs my dear
Depends poor Polly's life.

the fate of the piece was assured, and incidentally Lavinia's fortune was made.

Like many leading ladies, she had no particular talent, but made up for this by the possession of abundant charm. According to her biographer, her eyes were bright and liquid, and her smile "glowed celestial." Rank and fashion deserted Drury Lane to throng to Lincoln's Inn Fields. The play had the unparalleled run of 62 nights, and Lavinia's salary was raised to thirty shillings. Her benefit performance realised over a hundred and fifty pounds. Both salary and benefit argued in those days tremendous popularity.

However, this was not without its disadvantages. The whole town vied for her favours. Peers and apprentices, officers and merchants paid her the most marked attentions. Mr. Pearce prints some of the letters addressed to her, which show that human nature, in its dealings with the stage, has altered little in two centuries, although its mode of expression may have improved. One ensign writes explosively, D—n me, madam, if I am not so overcharged with Love that my Heart, which is the Bullet in the Barrel of my Body, will certainly burst and blow me into atoms if I have not your help to discharge the burthen." Another humble admirer, writing from "my little Rum (room) in Pel-Mel," says, "Charming mam, I no knot iff I have reson to acquse or bles my stars. I am entolerabel in Loof and redust to a mere shado. I have sat for me pictur to Zinck at legath for your ladyship; wit till then acksept it in black and whight. I am fair in my face to a wonder—my eyes languishing and sweete. I am al yours."

But Lavinia was proof against all the blandishments of her would-be lovers, and this is remarkable when we consider the general laxity of morals on the stage during those days. London was confounded by such a display of virtue, and regarded it as in rather bad taste. There were not wanting certain broad-sheet writers and Grub-street hacks who put the very worst construction upon her actions, and made her the butt of scurrilous and slanderous biographies. But these fell flat, for if she was not exactly a saint, she was known to be no libertine.

In the meanwhile a triumph greater than she had won on the boards was awaiting her. Charles, third Duke of Bolton, had fallen a victim to her charms. He already had a wife, but they were on bad terms, and were living apart. His love for Lavinia and hers for him, if not strictly legitimate, was, at any rate, genuine enough. At the end of the run of the "Beggar's Opera" she placed herself under his protection, and some years later, when the Duchess died, their relations were regularised by marriage. The new Duchess seems to have been a model of the domestic virtues. She had long renounced the stage, and all the pomps and vanities of the world. She lived quietly in the country, devoting herself to the care of her husband and children, and died in 1760. There were still some who refused to forget her origin or her antecedents. Horace Walpole, on hearing of her death, let fly a characteristic jibe, and Lady Wortley Montague wrote on her marriage: "Polly, bred in an ale-house and produced on the stage, has obtained wealth and a title, and found the way to be esteemed. So useful in early experience." But if we remember the standards of the day and the temptations to which Lavinia was exposed few will find it in their hearts to take a very censorious view of her life.

The story of Polly Peachum alone would hardly provide material for so substantial a book, and Mr. Pearce ekes it out with much that, if irrelevant, is interesting reading. For instance, he gives an account of the fashionable recreations of the period, including dog fights and other forms of "sport," which to us seem brutal and disgusting to the last degree. Our ancestors were a strong-stomached race. Mr. Pearce also seems to have an exhaustive knowledge of the contemporary stage, and his book is full of information about theatrical management and actors and actresses in the first half of the eighteenth century. The scale of payment will not bring the pangs of envy to the heart of the modern Thespian. Hippesley, who played leading parts (including that of Captain Macheath) got 20s a night. Walker, the great singer, had to be content with 16s 8d. "Mr. Bullock (he played Jemmy Thatcher, a minor part in the "Beggar's Opera") was paid at the rate of 6s 8d a day. Aston also had to be satisfied with 6s 8d a day, being charged 2 guineas for the services of Hippesley and Stephens, who played at his benefit. The scale descends with Mr. Houghton, who, though a decent actor, could draw no more than 3s 7d a day. Mr. Hallam, who met with so melancholy a fate at the hands of the irascible Macklin, was not considered worth more than half-a-crown a day and no benefit. Mrs. Hallam, on the other hand, drew as much as 16s 8d per day, and—a touch of human nature this—"was mulct several times 4s during the season." Fines, presumably." (Stanley Paul and Co.).

IN CANNIBAL LAND.

Mr. A. S. Meek, the author of "A Naturalist in Cannibal Land," seems to be a singularly modest individual, with a taste for adventure which has hitherto been abundantly gratified. His father was a British naturalist, and from him the author learned the joys and the mysteries of collecting. He also felt the open world calling, and in 1889 came out to Queensland, where for a couple of years he was by turns a jackeroo, a station hand, a swagman, and a kangaroo shooter. He also resumed his old occupation of collecting, and finally was commissioned by the Tring Museum to get specimens from New Guinea and the islands. Since then his life, with the exception of a few intervals, has been spent in various out-of-the-way corners of Melanesia. This book is the record thereof.

It should be said forthwith that interesting as it is, it might have been more so but for Mr. Meek's excessive modesty. Many of his expeditions were into the heart of unexplored country. The risks he ran were enormous—shipwreck, disease, trouble with the natives, death in a dozen imminent and unpleasant forms seem to have been almost daily incidents in his work. But he dismisses them as unimportant episodes, and when he describes them at all does so in a bald and matter of fact fashion, as though the whole subject went against the grain.

The author on several occasions made Papua the scene of his labours. He also started a cattle run at Samarai, and though the venture was not particularly successful, he thinks that cattle-raising offers excellent prospects. He also penetrated as far as the Snow Mountains in Dutch New Guinea, and visited at one time or another most of the islands in the Solomon group. Of all he has something interesting to say, and he is one of those who holds very definite views upon the question of health in the tropics. "I have now," he writes, "been in all some 18 years in New Guinea, and the Solomons, and do not consider it impossible to live there 50 years if one is reasonably careful. The average idea about New Guinea and other tropical places is that the climate is worse and the natives more savage than they really are. But one must have some rules of life. To take with one a stock of whisky is to invite trouble, and to have the invitation promptly accepted. . . . Apart from caution in regard to alcohol, I think that the most necessary thing in the tropics is to take a great deal of exercise. The chance of a lazy life never came my way, so that I was never tempted to loaf. But I have seen enough to conclude that it is the man who is afraid to sweat whose liver hardens, or who falls ill in a tropical climate. An exaggerated fear of the sun causes more illness than it wards off."

Again, Mr. Meek discusses the native question with the knowledge born of personal experience. His relations with the natives seem to have been satisfactory on the whole. "I never;" he writes, "had any great cause for fear in dealing with the New Guinea natives. In my experience they are a great deal afraid of the white man, and would rarely molest him unless they were interfered with first. The guiding principle in dealing with them, as I think it is with most savages, is not to get excited or flurried. So long as you keep your nerve and your temper you have little or nothing to fear. I have been, of course, at different times, in positions which seemed to suggest great peril, but with calmness and with firmness the most difficult position soon relieved itself." He also touches on the question of the supply of native labour, on which, he says, the future industrial prosperity of Papua depends:—"Can the native be got to work steadily without compulsion? Or will it be necessary to compel him to work? Or should we do as we do in Fiji—let the native coloured race keep to its habits of idleness, and bring in coolies from India to the plantations. All the politics of Papua hinge on this question. The third one, however, need hardly be asked. The Australian Government would never permit the example of Fiji to be followed, and is resolved on a policy of 'Papua for the Papuans.' A proposal to compel the Papuan to do a little work, either for himself, for the Government, or for the planters, has also been vetoed by Australia; though it is possible that that decision may be reconsidered one day. At present the policy is to try to coax the Papuan to ways of steady industry. The Lieutenant-Governor, his Excellency Judge Murray, has now some hope that the native sloth of the Papuan is being overcome by his greed for the white men's 'trade,' and he thinks that if I am not so overcharged with Love that my Heart, which is the Bullet in the Barrel of my Body, will certainly burst and blow me into atoms if I have not your help to discharge the burthen." Another humble admirer, writing from "my little Rum (room) in Pel-Mel," says, "Charming mam, I no knot iff I have reson to acquse or bles my stars. THE GOLDEN FLEECE.

Mr. C. T. Burtt is an indefatigable delver into the records of our past, and in "The Founding of the Wool Industry of Australia" he has collected a vast amount of information about the beginnings of the Golden Fleece in this country. It is curious to think to-day, when our flocks are well-nigh innumerable, that Sir Joseph Banks, enthusiastic though he was on the score of our potentialities, reported adversely upon New South Wales as a possible wool-producing country. He declared that the poor quality of the natural grasses and the cost of transport to England were an insuperable bar to the prospects of the industry. Fortunately there were others who took a more sanguine view. Mr. Burtt tells us of the early importations of sheep from India and Cape Colony, and examines the claims of various persons to have been the founders of the industry. But in his opinion the honour belongs to Captain John Macarthur, who in 1804 bought eight merinos from the flock of George III., who himself had got them from the choice and carefully guarded flocks of Spain. These eight sheep were despatched to Captain Macarthur's farm at the Cowpastures (now Camden), and waxed fat and multiplied. In 1807 246lb of wool was shipped from Australia; by 1835 the amount had increased to 3,776,191lb. (The Government Printer.)

SOME NEW NOVELS.

If sales are any criterion, Mr. Hall Caine is the most popular novelist living to-day. Of some of his books, almost three-quarters of a million have been sold in English alone, while they have been translated into every language, and have penetrated into the most unlikely quarters of the globe. Whether his latest work, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," will repeat this phenomenal success remains to be seen. The author apparently anticipates the happiest reception, and we are told that it is to be published simultaneously in English, Bohemian, Danish, Dutch, Finnish, French, and Swedish, while German, Hungarian, Italian, Japanese, Polish, Russian, Spanish, and Yiddish translations are in preparation. This is a record which can hardly be equalled by that of any book save the Bible. It is easy to sneer at Hall Caine's vogue, but the most superior person must admit that there must be some remarkable quality in his books to endow them with so widespread an appeal. Yet, exactly what that quality is, it is not easy to say. If "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" sells by hundreds of thousands, and if Japanese, Yiddishers, and Finns devour it with avidity, the reason why will be not very apparent. Like most of the author's works, it has a purpose, indeed a double purpose. It discusses the iniquity of allowing girls to grow up in ignorance of the harder facts of life, and also the attitude of the Roman Catholic Church towards divorce. Both of these questions are being widely debated at the present moment, and the author artfully enhances the topical flavour by making his hero an Antarctic explorer, who successfully braves the perils of the South Pole.

The story is simple enough. The motherless Mary O'Neill is faced with marriage with a profligate by her ambitious father, a Manx-Irish-American millionaire (presumably worse than the ordinary variety). When she learns the character of her husband she resolves that the marriage is to be one only in name. Later Martin Conrad, the explorer, and the friend of her youth, returns, and she is sorely tempted. For long she resists, but at last she falls, and then sends her lover south once again. A child is born, and Mary is reduced to terrible straits. She is even on the point of selling herself to get food for her baby when Conrad comes back in the nick of time. But Mr. Hall Caine knows the value of a pathetic ending, and Mary succumbs to the effects of privation, happy at last. The author indulges in no subtle tones of characterisation. Black is Stygian darkness with him, and white is purity transcendental. Lord Ran is allowed no single redeeming feature; Conrad has all the manly virtues to an incredible degree; Mary is the conventional figure of melodrama, sweetness and injured innocence incarnate, whose one slip is the fault of her husband rather than of herself. Mr. Hall Caine shows all his old power of appealing to the sympathies of his readers, and of contriving dramatic situations. One would not hesitate to commend his book within certain limits, and to predict a measure of success for it. But its inherent artistic value quite fails to account for the probability that it will be hailed as one of the books of the age, and read by millions. (Heinemann: The Sydney Book Club.)

Mr. Sidney Dark tells us that for some time he has been impressed by the disgusting tyranny, ever growing more grinding, exercised by politicians, philanthropists, social reformers, and other virtuous persons over the lives of the great mass of everyday women, who are bored by politics (except at elections), have no desire whatever to be reformed, and merely desire to live and love and have a good time. "The Man who Would Not be King" is the expression of this revolt. It is the story of "Slavingtonville," the model town where "Slavington's Peptonised Soup" has been produced by successive generations of the family. The family itself is the repository of all the virtues, all but one of its members, Fenimore Slavington, an irresponsible Bohemian dreamer, whom at last fate calls to take charge of the business. He finds Slavingtonville the incarnation of dull but hypocritical respectability. Everyone is well fed and well clothed, but no one is happy. Fenimore struggles against the influences of the place, and tries to infuse some spirit of independence into its servile inhabitants. But it is all in vain. Liberty becomes license, and, so far from being improved, the last state of Slavingtonville is worse than the first. In the end the would-be reformer can stand it no longer, and departs into his former obscurity, taking with him the one attractive woman whom the town contained. The story is excellently told, and if the picture of a "model" city given by Mr. Dark is a little exaggerated there is a solid basis of truth in his criticism. (The Bodley Head.)

The heroine of Mr. Frankfort Moore's "Fanny's First Novel" has nothing to do with the heroine of Bernard Shaw's "Fanny's First Play." The two young ladies are the Poles apart, and the former, though less up to date, is a good deal more talented. She is, in fact, Miss Fanny Burney, novelist, lady-in-waiting, and friend of all the members of the brilliant circle which meet under Dr. Burney's musical and hospitable roof. Mr. Frankfort Moore has written a historical novel somewhat in the style of his own "Jessamy Bride." He tells us how the obscure little lady who sat quietly in a corner wrote a novel and published it anonymously; how its wit and observation took London by storm; how society was vastly intrigued to know who was the author, and how no one dreamed of suspecting that the demure Miss Burney was the person guilty of so unwomanly a deed. Dr. Johnson stalks across the scene diffusing an atmosphere of pompous condescension; we listen to Garrick's quips and cranks, and we share in Mrs. Thrale's elegant conversation. A novel in which the characters are real notoriously is full of pitfalls to any author least well equipped than Mr. Moore, but he trims his sails between fact and fiction with happy discretion, and though "Fanny's First Novel" is not quite a "Jessamy Bride," it is not far short of being one. (Hutchinson and Co.: George Robertson and Co.)

Mr. Rafael Sabatini is thoroughly at home in the bloodstained, passionate, and romantic atmosphere of medieval Italy, and in "The Strolling Saint" he repeats his former successes in this vein. The book is the confessions of the High and Mighty Agostino d'Anguissola, Tyrant of Mondolfo, and Lord of Carmina in the State of Piacenza, and the adventures of this gentleman are as picturesque as his title. Agostino was vowed to the service of the Church by a pious mother, but as he grows up he shows that he has inherited rather the characteristics of his father, a lusty warrior, which befit him ill for a life of religion. However, he is sent away to gain knowledge that will equip him for the monastery, but at the very first establishment he visits he has some surprising experiences, which result in his being handed over to justice. His escape—it is the first of many—is sufficiently remarkable, and henceforth his life is a succession of startling adventures and hair-raising perils, from which he emerges scathless, thanks to his mother wit and his good right arm. Of course, we know what the end will be, but in the interval there are villains to be disposed of, and beautiful ladies to be wooed, and Mr. Sabatini embellishes a well-told and spirited story with a wealth of romantic colour. (Stanley, Paul, and Co.)

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

The last mail from London brings theatrical affairs to the annual bank holiday (sometimes called by cockney wits "St. Lubbock's Day"), wherefore the number of play-houses still open barely reaches a score, and the news is all of what shall be in the autumn. The American manager, Charles Frohman, seems to have most to say on the subject, and he says it to the press of New York! He will produce a new play, "The Mob," by John Galsworthy, a human document appealing for the life of weaker nations against the strong. Mr. Frohman speaks of five new pieces for London by Sir James Barrie. In addition to "The Legend of Leonora" and "Half Hour," there will be a satirically humorous comedy "The Ladies' Shakespeare," as well as two fifty-minute plays as yet unnamed. Somerset Maugham, a dramatist who has been silent for some time, is to be represented by a play with a purpose, "The Promised Land." Maugham, it may be added, is known on this side only by Ethel Irving's brilliant production of "Lady Frederic." His last piece, "Smith," was purchased by Allan Hamilton and Harry Plimmer for their now disbanded comedy combination, as was also Stanley Houghton's much-debated "Hindle Wakes," but in both instances the novel acquisitions were eventually shelved.

Mr. Vincent O'Brien, the new accompanist at the M'Cormack concerts, is a Dublin musician of eminence, who was originally trained by his father, a well-known pianist and teacher in the Irish capital. Ultimately he studied organ and composition under that famous player the late Sir Robert Stewart (at that time Principal of the Royal Irish Academy of Music), and was subsequently appointed organist in turn at the Rathmines (a suburb) Church, the Carmelite Church in Clarendon-street, and St. Domenic's Church. By that time Mr. O'Brien had become a prominent figure in the musical life of Dublin, and was accordingly chosen choirmaster at St. Mary's Cathedral, where he has trained a splendid body of voices (60 boys and 30 tenors and basses) capable of singing the difficult music of Palestrina at sight. It was in 1903 that a bashful youth from Athlone of the name of "M'Cormack" called upon Mr. O'Brien to gain admission into this richly endowed choir. The experienced teacher recognised the charm of the immature voice at once, and after hearing him sing "When Other Lips" urged hard work as all that was needed for a brilliant career. Not only so, he offered to prepare the young tenor for the annual Dublin Musical Festival, known as the "Feis Cecil" ("Feast of Music"), and after "tipping him" as the probable winner, had the satisfaction of seeing the gold medal bestowed upon his pupil. John M'Cormack's magnetic charm with Irish audiences dates from this occasion (May, 1903), and so popular did he become that his singing was instrumental in founding the Dublin Oratorio Society the same year, when he was heard in Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and the sum needed to establish the new choral association was successfully raised. Mr. O'Brien was elected conductor, and still holds that position, whilst he is equally "on leave" from his duties at the Cathedral. "The Dream of Gerontius," and portions of Wagner's "Parsifal" have been performed under his baton. Mr. O'Brien's attention to this country was first drawn by the number of talented Australians who came from London under engagement to the Dublin Oratorio Society. He conducted the "Elijah" with Amy Castles, and other works with Kate Rooney, Eugenie Boland, and Fanny Bauer (Mrs. Frank Hickey), all of Sydney, whilst Mr. Clay, a former Perth, also sang solos with approval. Mr. O'Brien has composed a number of short works, including an "Easter Hymn" for tenor solo, full chorus, and orchestra, which the Dublin Society produced five years ago with Mr. M'Cormack, who has also sung it in the United States. In one word Mr. O'Brien is an accomplished musician; but he will prove an accomplished musician; but he will prove his ability down to posterity as the man who gave John M'Cormack his first singing lessons.

Mr. Lewis Waller enters upon the last two weeks of his stimulating season at the Theatre Royal this evening with the first performance on any stage of William Devereux's "Last Highwayman," in which the resources of his English dramatic company will be still further revealed. The actor-manager has with him some artists of assured reputation, like Mr. Halliwell Hobbes, "whose future is behind them" as a French wit once expressed it, but past productions have brought forward young actors of promise. In "Henry V." Mr. Alex. Thompson shone out as Fluellen; in "A Butterfly on the Wheel" Mr. Charles Quartermaine, essentially a London artist, presented with acceptable fervour the character of the lover, Roderick Collingwood; and now in "A Marriage of Convenience" Mr. Reginald Dane has played the important role of the Chevalier de Valclos with exactly the right touch of fatuous and effeminate gallantry required by the English version. This young artist discovered his aptitude for "the boards" in a London amateur club, a process which has led many an unfortunate fellow to carry them in after-life! Mr. Dane, on the other hand, got on from the very first, making his start in a small part at the St. James's Theatre. During the considerable run of "If I Were King" in 1902 the youthful actor understudied Henry Ainley without any apparent likelihood of playing his part (Noel le Solys), but one evening he was unexpectedly thrust into it, and did so well that he remained with Sir George Alexander's company for nearly three years. Mr. Dane's favourite character during his stay was in "Old Heidelberg" (admirably played in Australia by Miss Nellie Stewart and Mr. Harcourt Beatty), in which he had a brief but effective opportunity. Since then Mr. Dane's best parts have been under Lewis Waller's management, notably as the Duke of Buckingham to the actor-manager's d'Artagnan in "The Three Musketeers;" and another excellent part, that of Valclos, has now made him favourably known to Canadian and Australian playgoers.

Miss Alice Brophy, the well-known Manly organist, a member of an artistic Australian family, her brother Charles, a marine painter, having recently exhibited at the Royal Academy, whilst her niece, Miss Alice Healey of Bexley, is widely known for her fine contralto voice, has been paying her first visit to England, where she has been hearing and seeing a vast deal since her arrival in London in June. The visitor heard the Hungarian pianist Ernest von Dohnanyi at the Aeolian Hall, where he freshly illuminated a Brahm's sonata by his exquisite command of tone gradation, and she was present at the Royal Albert Hall with Miss Nettie Hollander, to hear Kreissler (the great violinist), Dr. Pachmann (the Chopin pianist), and Alma Gluck. The last-named is a New York-trained soprano from the Metropolitan Opera House quite new to London, where she has made a decided sensation. Miss Bryant has profitably occupied much of her holiday in attending organ recitals at various churches, and has played upon several organs herself, including the one in Queen's Hall, four manuals and 68 stops. With this she was greatly pleased. In the city of London she heard and appreciated the playing of Dr. Hodge at St. Stephen's, Walbrook, a beautiful old church behind the Mansion House; and Dr. George F. Vincent (brother of Dr. Charles Vincent, the organist and composer, who toured Australia for Trinity College, London), at St. Michael's, Cornhill. The latter heard Miss Bryant play, and declared she had been extremely well taught, and seemed surprised that her training was exclusively Australian. Besides attending all the available Cathedral services, the visitor was deeply impressed by the extracts from Wagner's "Parsifal," played by a fine orchestra under Sir Henry Wood, whilst beautiful tableaux vivants and scenery illustrated the action. This formed part of a variety entertainment at the Coliseum to which Margaret Cooper and various dancers and low comedians contributed! At the Royal College of Music, Miss Bryant was introduced to Sir Frederick Bridge and Sir Walter Parratt (who was teaching in the same building), and was invited by the former to sit with him one Sunday in the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey.

News reaches us of Miss Ella Mackenzie, a Sydney pianist, now long absent in Germany, who gave her first concert in London at the Aeolian Hall on June 10. Very favourable notices are published of this young artist, who is now studying under Busoni, and intends giving another concert in November. Her programme announces that Warwick Mackenzie will give an orchestral concert in London next season." This young violinist has been studying in Berlin almost ever since he left Sydney, but latterly in London under Signor Antonio De Grassi, an Italian virtuoso now famous for his playing of Bach. The "Morning Post" compares De Grassi in this respect with Joachim, under whose instruction his Bach interpretations were formed. Mr. Mackenzie writes from Berlin under date August 1, his master being away for the vacation at Bretagne, France, and mentions that he heard young Lionel Lawson (Berlin) the other day, and found the boy-violinist wonderfully advanced in his style mentally, and physically several inches taller than when he made his farewell appearance in Sydney.

NO. 1 JURY COURT.

(Before Mr. Justice Ferguson and a jury of 4.)

CLAIM ON A RESUMPTION.

Hardie and another v Municipal Council of Sydney.

Mr. A. Thomson and Mr. Mellios, instructed by Messrs. Backhouse and Jeanneret, appeared for plaintiffs; and Mr. J. L. Campbell, K.C., and Mr. Edwards, instructed by Mr. Percy S. Dawson, city solicitor (of Messrs. Dawson, Waldron, and Glover), for the defendant. This was an action brought by John Robert Hardie and George Kiss, executors of the will of John Hardie, deceased, to have assessed by the jury the value of certain land in Duke-street, Woolloomooloo, resumed by the defendant council, on January 31, 1912, for the purpose of enlarging and widening Duke-street, between William-street and Woolloomooloo Bay. The jury assessed the value of the property at £1629.

CLAIM FOR DAMAGED PREMISES.

Youell v North Sydney Council.

Mr. Mack and Mr. Addison, instructed by Mr. W. H. Atkinson, appeared for plaintiff, and Mr. Windeyer, instructed by Messrs. Pigott and Stinson, for the defendant. This was an action brought by Charlotte Jane Youell against the council of the municipality of North Sydney to recover compensation for damage to her premises, known as 23 Campbell-street, near Milson's Point, brought about by the negligence of the defendant in the care, control, and management of certain sewers, drains, and gutters adjacent to her property, in consequence of which quantities of water and filth were poured upon the premises portion of the house, and also certain furniture and effects were damaged. The case for the plaintiff, who is a married woman, was that, during the last 18 months, owing to the faulty construction of the sewer, etc., in the vicinity of her house, water was allowed by the defendant council to accumulate in a gully, and when it overflowed the water, carrying with it a good deal of refuse, flooded the basement of her premises, and did the damage complained of. The result was that tenants to whom she had let a portion of the house refused to reside there any longer. The goodwill in that respect became greatly diminished, and she was also prevented, by reason of the deterioration of the property, from renting, selling, or otherwise disposing of it as profitably as she otherwise would have done. There were two sections, but, by consent, they were consolidated, and in the first plaintiff claimed £500, and in the second £750. She not only as

Of course, if you are sound in Health, the White Corpuscles (Leucocytes) in your blood will deal with the invaders in their usual business-like manner. But, if you have a Cold on the Chest, it weakens the Tissue of the Lung, and then the White Corpuscles lose a certain amount of their fighting-power, and so the Germs get a lodging place. Then, unless Nature is assisted, those wretched Germs multiply with extraordinary rapidity and commence to consume the Lung.

Working of the Parliament Act—The Coming English Land Bill—Agricultural Labourers' Opportunity—A Dainty Bedroom.

WESTMINSTER, Aug. 1.

A striking example of the usefulness of the Parliament Act is afforded by the dealing of the House of Lords with the Scottish Temperance Bill. Introduced in the Commons last year, where it received the unanimous support of Scottish representatives, it was, when sent on to the Lords, promptly chucked out. Under the old order of things there would have been an end of a social measure urgently demanded in Scotland. The Lords were absolute masters of the situation, and in accordance with traditions and practice prevalent through long courses of history, they would have used their power to scout the desire of a nation. On the bill coming up a second time this session, no attempt was made to hide determination to deal with it in common with the Home Rule Bill and the measure for disestablishing the Welsh Church. On reflection, noble Lords came to the conclusion, based on the principle cynically enunciated by the Marquis of Lansdowne, that it would not be conducive to their own interests to pursue that extreme course. Overtures were made to the Government for a private consultation on the matter. This resulted in an interchange of concessions which while leaving the principle of the measure and its provisions untouched made it possible to pass it by general consent.

It is evident that during the coming recess the agricultural labourer will once more assume an important position in current political controversy. Mr. Lloyd George's scheme of land reform, with which he will go a-crusading in the autumn, whilst concerned with the welfare of the farmer, will be found to be mainly based on desire to improve the position of the labourer. A scheme is under consideration for repeating a demonstration that proved effectual on the eve of the general election in 1892, which brought Mr. Gladstone back to power. That desperate struggle was, of course, fought round the Home Rule flag. But astute party managers were not blind to the advantage of any possible alliance, and assiduously looked up the agricultural labourer. A conference of delegates was arranged to meet in London, which turned out an unqualified success. The men filling the conference hall were the pick of their class, selected by their fellow-labourers. The sincerity of the movement was testified in practical fashion by each community represented clubbing its pence to pay the travelling expenses of the village Hampdens sent to this memorable Parliament. Mr. Gladstone, amidst a scene of overwhelming excitement, addressed them for a full hour, and doubtless won a sackful of votes. It is quite possible that the experiment may be repeated in connection with Mr Lloyd George's scheme.

There was a little episode in the course of this great gathering in December, 1891, that deeply touched Mr. Gladstone. Some years later, when he had finally retired from political life, I heard him tell the story to an entranced company at a dinner table. Amongst the delegates who spoke at the Conference was a sturdy farm hand, who had thriven well on a scanty wage. He told how "afore he started" the very last words his wife said to him were, "William, whatever happens, mind you shake Mr. Gladstone's hand, if not for your own sake, for the sake of the childer and me." William, bent upon performing the martial injunction, was faced by what seemed superhuman difficulty. Fate had led him to a seat well in the centre of the hall. Between him and the platform where Mr. Gladstone stood was wedged a mass of sturdy humanity, every unit ready to give his left hand if only he might with his right hold Mr. Gladstone in friendly grip. When Mr. Gladstone came to speak, he, not unforgetful of the yearning in the cottage home in Warwickshire, so graphically described by the head of it, stretched out his hand in the direction of the speaker, and laughingly expressed his regret that he could not make his arm long enough to reach his friend.

There the episode seemed to have ended, and Mr. Gladstone proceeded with his speech. Ten minutes later there was some commotion at the back of the platform, and people turning to discover the cause beheld William of Warwickshire, his honest face flushed, his Sunday clothes much rumpled, elbowing his way through the astonished committee, making straight for the table at which Mr. Gladstone stood all unconscious of the pending interruption. In another moment William was at the table, with a great hand stretched across. Mr. Gladstone, stopping in the midst of sentence, laughingly clasped it, amid thundering cheers, "There," he said, when the ordeal was over, "Now I have typically shaken hands with you all."

A rare difficulty in house decorating is met when the plan involves the fitting in of new furniture to an old house. I was staying the other day at a country house, where it was boldly grappled with and triumphantly overcome. The house and its far-reaching park are among the best known within a long drive of London. You may read all about them in Fanny Burney's diary, she having spent some of the happiest days of her young life a frequent guest at the hall. Mansion and park recently changed hands. The new owner, being a man of taste as well as of wealth, and having a gifted counsellor in his wife, was confronted by the necessity of almost entirely refurnishing the house. It is all well done, but absolute perfectness is reached in respect of the principal bedrooms.

Through three windows, set in a broad bay, extending almost over one side of the room, the picture of the park spreads, with hill and glade, and the gleam of a famous trout stream. The ceiling of the luxurious room is cream white, a delicate carved tracery forming the cornice. On the walls are panels of striped brocade in soft tones of old pink, that is nearer to terra cotta, yet cunningly differs. The floor is covered with a carpet in shades of the same colour. The bed stands on a dais, raised about a foot from the floor, covered with a light blue carpet. It is made in a new and comfortably convenient way, the two single beds being set within one wide footboard with one headpiece. The woodwork, carved and enamelled white, is splashed with sprays of delicately-tinted flowers, honeysuckle and faint blue cornflowers. A low, wide chest of drawers is made in the same style. The bed and windows are draped with curtains in creamy satin, with a pink pattern over it. The quilt is of thick cream colour satin, with sprays of tulips and honeysuckle, and other flowers, embroidered here and there, the colours being quiet and harmonious. A big padded sofa and several armchairs are covered with the same silk as the bed and curtain draperies.

The dressing-table, which stands across one corner of the room, where plenty of light falls on it from the broad windows, is of dainty fashion. The woodwork is like the rest of the furniture, but the back consists of a mirror, cut in the shape of a large spread fan, set slightly on one side, hung at the back with pink satin of the wall colours, and pale blue plush, where an ordinary table would have its white cover. This makes an admirable background for the carved silver-backed brushes and other toilet requisites. All these beautiful things were designed and made in Paris, workmen being sent over to arrange them in their places. I do not know how much this fancy cost, but incidentally I heard that the kitchen arrangements and fittings, including stoves, cost £700. Of this £200 was required to meet the bill for copper pans, kettles, and other cooking apparatus.

What is more annoying than the tickling of a cold? You keep continually coughing, and cough nothing up. Your throat is dry and parched, and you wear yourself into a fever. It is best to do away with the tickling by removing the cause. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cures colds, and they stay cured.—Advt.

THE LONDON STAGE.

III.

THE ART OF COMEDY.

(BY ARTHUR MASON.)

One of the chief delights of the Australian playgoer come to London is to be found in his visits to the comedy theatres. It is true that they are more or less at low water just now, in that the older writers of comedy seem to be written out, while the younger writers, though they make a brilliant success now and then, seem incapable of a sustained series of good plays. Mr. Arnold Bennett may yet do it—"Milestones," and "The Great Adventure" give every warrant of hope—but it is hard to discover anyone else in the least likely to project such a succession of sidelights on life as was dashed across the British stage by Pinero, by H. A. Jones, by Barrie, and by Shaw, in their respective heydays. The loss we suffer is emphasised, moreover, in that they, and others with them, were all producing brilliant work at one and the same time.

The comedy theatres of London, nevertheless, remain worth while, if in diminished measure. And they are especially worth while for the Australian, whose stage for years past has been high and dry above the stream of British drama in respect of its most important and ablest production. Rarely is London to be found without some half-dozen simultaneous performances of comedy, and wherever comedy is so performed it has its sure and certain charm for the visitor whose own stage in that regard is at the mercy of chance.

And that is so not only because comedy is delightful in itself, or because it is a refreshing change from the accustomed. It is so most of all because comedy, being a matter of ensemble quite as much as it is a matter of individually prominent performance, is played in London with very great attention to ensemble detail. Older Australian playgoers will remember what that may mean when they recall productions of the Brough-Boucicault days, in which, from time to time, Titheradge or Brough or Anson or Boucicault or Cecil Ward came into the scheme not in leading parts but in small parts. It is a far cry to those days and to Australian casts in which artists of that stamp filled in the detail. But that is precisely the way of London comedy to-day. If the theatre happens to be one in actor-manager control the actor-manager—as suggested last week—will assume the principal role, whatever happens. But in comedy, more than in most dramatic construction, the subsidiary characters are often important characters, and the star cannot so easily insist on a monopoly of the limelights alid to his shining or the centre of the stage for his much speaking.

That is well understood in London, with the result that you may go from theatre to theatre in pursuit of your comedy, and find it everywhere played with grace and often with distinction, by the whole cast. Indeed, that is so generally the way of it that when, as sometimes happens, you come upon an inferior artist in a comedy cast, you are astonished. And there are two reasons-to-chief for your surprise. One is that you have so often seen comedy played by splendid casts. The other is that you know there are hosts of unemployed actors and actresses in London, some of them distinguished, most of them highly efficient. No comedy cast, thus, need suffer from a lack of first-rate artists. And, as a matter of fact, only very rarely do they suffer from that lack, and, if one thought that a recital of unfamiliar names could possess any interest, one might fill this column with recollections of men—of women, too—but in lesser degree—who play brilliantly the smaller parts in London comedy. In some cases, indeed, they are finer artists than the actors-in-chief, and they are not the actors-in-chief only because fortune has not lifted them to occupancy of those dizzy heights on which an actor, being also a manager, is free to divert his own range of work.

Perhaps the individual actor does not get his deserts in the matter, but at any rate the art of comedy performance—an art essentially of ensemble—is advantaged. Thus there are compensations—and their extent may be gauged not only when outstanding character studies are in question, but also when it is a matter of giving quite familiar types their due place in the scheme. Mr. Arnold Bennett has been telling us lately that the art of playwriting is much less difficult than it might be, in that the author is so constantly safeguarded by the gifts of the artists who interpret him. In other words, Mr. Arnold Bennett does not forget how often and with what skill the actors of the London comedy theatres have translated the shadowy hints of the printed page into a warmth of flesh and blood hardly conceived of even by the writer. The comedy of character parts is especially dependent upon the artistic reach of its interpreters, and both it and the comedy of everyday manners is played in London with refreshing ability. Often, not very much of dramatic power is demanded of these artists. But even when that is so, the distinction of the stage is preserved, and simply to watch the ease of these actors and to see how, effortlessly and by their native manner of walking and talking, they achieve the necessary "well-bred" atmosphere, is to have ample warrant for admiration of the art of comedy. Lord Rosebery has just been discovering a decay of manners. However that may be, it is certain that the drama plays a valuable part in the education of the people, and not the least of the uses of a comedy stage is that it constantly projects the graces and refinements of the cultivated world.

When a comedy ends its run in a London theatre the career of the whole cast ends with it—save only that of the actor-manager-head of the scheme, of course. The new piece comes into being with an entirely new array of artists. This arrangement has no reference to the abilities of the dethroned ones. They may have been playing hundreds of nights in a big success, and the new comedy may contain parts exactly suited to them; Nevertheless, they go on the "resting" list, unless they manage to place themselves elsewhere. The theory underlying this method is plain to see. The appeal of each theatre must be kept as fresh as possible, and new faces and new methods are of more value than proven abilities. One result as already suggested, is that numbers of good actors are constantly out of work. They are so good, and there are so many of them, that the Australian can never quite understand why they are not more freely used for the replenishing of the Australian stage. They comprise artists in all lines. Comedy companies? Without leaving the precincts of the Strand you could form half-a-dozen from among the "resting." And they would be comedy companies.

The Irish Players, and Miss Horniman's Manchester Repertory Company, have both had seasons in London recently. They have served to remind us once again that the art of comedy is splendidly renewing its youth in places far from the metropolis. There is no opportunity just now to review the repertory work of the provincial cities. It is a flourishing growth everywhere. But Miss Horniman's season has reaffirmed the fact that in Manchester, at any rate, comedy is served by exponents as gifted as any in London.

As for the Irish Players, of the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, they have given us, as they always give us, extraordinary vivid glimpses of the life and thought of the Irish peasantry. Their dramatists show, just now, a regrettable leaning toward the morbidly hopeless, and sometimes, under the magic of the setting of this little band of fine artists, the stage of their theatre became a horror of realism. But they have played other things, and with equal magic. The humours of Ireland have bubbled from them; their exposition of the pathos of humble Irish life has moved us to tears. Most of all, and best of all, they have so translated for us the lyrical eloquence of Yeats and Synge, that the mere language of it has been a music of exquisite cadences, and their interpretation of it an utterance of solemn beauty.

AN OCEANIC VENICE.

A TITANIC CITY BY THE SEA.

(BY PROFESSOR MACMILLAN BROWN.)

Most readers know something of Stonehenge and its circles of enormous stones. Some have heard of the neighbouring Avebury with its still greater mooted circle of untooled blocks, or of the miles of monolithic avenue at Carnac, in Brittany. Still fewer have heard of Easter Island and its megalithic platforms and huge stone busts, or of Tiahuanaco, the unhistoried city of the Titans, on the Andes, 14,000 feet above the sea. It is only the student of the Pacific Ocean or of anthropology that knows anything of Metalanim, a megalithic city on the south-eastern shore of Ponape, one of the most easterly islands of the Caroline Group.

Yet my visit to this architectural problem has impressed me as deeply as that to the megalithic structures of Peru. Unlike these, it is not on mountain plateaus or naturally fortified heights. It is right on the sea, and only at low tide is there any possibility of a land-force approaching it from the island; and then only by wading across the shallow pools and lagoons of the reef, a perilous undertaking under an equatorial sun, as I found at the cost of many a blister, and the ultimate loss of rolls of epidermis. But its streets are canals, along which even at fairly low tide, a canoe can find its way. The mangrove has taken possession of their borders; and yet, as we paddle or pole along their watery miles glimpses of the enormous blocks that line them and make the breastwork of their island platforms, impress us with their colossal proportions perhaps more than if they had all stood up clear in the sunlight.

A MYSTERY.

Christian's book on the Caroline Islands, following the monographs of Kubary of tragic death, stirred scholars to puzzled thought over the origin and the builders of this seacity of the giants. They gave a plan and exact measurements of its islands and walls and stones. They excavated one or two of the tombs, and found shell-beads and shell-axes and shell-wristlets and breast-ornaments. But it threw no light on the problem; how could this great city of colossal stones have arisen like a dream out of the sea? How could people who had no better than shell decorations and shell axes have quarried and transported and erected in their place these countless blocks that only the most modern appliances would seem able to manipulate? How could this megalithic Venice have sprung into being thousands of miles from all continents, all great centres of civilisation, and all great routes of traffic?

A more recent visitor, a Dr. Hambruch, a member of a scientific expedition from Hamburg, visited it some half-dozen years ago; and in a short monograph he has given a corrected plan of the place, and revised measurements; he has even gathered from the natives, through an interpreter new meanings for the old names of the buildings, and the islands. But he has only added to our bewilderment. It is always perilous to venture on conjecture based on local or even scientifically philological explanation of geographical names; but it becomes doubly perilous when the explanation is given in an unfamiliar language. His monograph has not led us any nearer to a solution of the mystery. It has rather added to the darkness of it by adding to our admiration for the builders of such colossal structures.

THEORY OF BLACK BUILDERS.

Basing their conjecture on four skulls, or, rather, calvaria, found by the former in one of the tombs, Kubary, and following him Christian, came to the conclusion that the builders belonged to the black race. They were either long or medium skulls; and negro skulls are long. Instances are given of Micronesian skulls that are some, not quite so long and some of about the same length. Christian tries to strengthen this weak-kneed logic by mentioning the occurrence of stone buildings at Gaua, in the Banks Group; and by professing to find a wonderful similarity in root-words between Ponapean and the language of Efate in the New Hebrides, and that of Mota in the Banks Group. He hamstrings the linguistic argument by giving plentiful illustrations of the similarity of Ponapean words to Polynesian, whilst he leaves his linguistic proof of the Melanesian origin of this megalithic city without illustration or example. It is really Polynesian that is the keystone of the bridge that connects Micronesian languages and Melanesian.

As for the skull measurement, it is always a slender foundation for conjecture as to the race of an individual or set of individuals, for in most races there is a mixture of long and short skulls, though in different proportions. But here it is fantastic, for there were only four calvaria, and these evidently varied in index from medium to long, as Micronesian skulls evidently vary, to judge from the examples given; and in Melanesia, as along the coast of New Guinea, long and short and medium heads are to be found in almost every village. Though the skull of the negro is generally long, that of the negritto, or small negro, is short; and, as far as I have been able to gather from my own personal observation, the primeval population of this western region of the Pacific, from the Philippines to New Guinea, and from New Guinea to the Southern New Hebrides, was negritto, and over it was laid a stratum of taller humanity with longer heads.

We shall have to find some sounder cases of conjecture than this if any of the darkness round this Pacific mystery is to be dispelled.

SEA MONARCHS FROM THE EAST.

One of the most striking things about this great megalithic city is that it is a Venice. With Kubary and Christian, I agree, against Darwin and Hale, that there is no evidence of subsidence here, of a land-city sinking into the sea. The streets are as manifestly waterways as those of the Venice in the Adriatic; the colossal breastworks on either side of them are all above low tide; the buildings have been erected on islands that have been plainly laid on the reef by the hand of man. The reef is perhaps at its narrowest here; but it is a level platform, the outer edge of which stands over oceanic depths. Right behind the greatest building there is a sheltered nook in a canal, where even at ebb tide a canoe could be launched into the wide ocean clear of reef and surf. Round about the city is a megalithic breakwater, vulnerable only at this point, yet easily guarded by a small cordon of soldiers or canoes. But in this haven-mouth have been dropped heaps of great stones, as if to blockade it against an invader by sea.

The clear meaning of this is that the founder of the city and its dynasty came over the ocean and came from the east. For he made his capital on the east of the island, and he made it so that if enemies attacked him from land he could escape by sea in the direction whence he came. He was an oceanic man, and had no fear of the element on which he was bred. But he needed waterways that were free from the tyranny of storm and surf; he needed to bring up his rafts of stone right alongside the islands he had made; and when his ideal city was built he wished to have calm waters in which he could exercise his fleets in war manoeuvres, or lead his stately processions of canoes from holy isle to holy isle, from temple to temple.

KAVA, FATHER-RIGHT, AND MEGALITHISM.

That he came from the East is confirmed by the great importance attached to kava-making and kava-drinking in the two most temple-like buildings, Nan Tanach and Pan Katara, in front of the great steps that lead up to the central courtyard and its altar tomb are huge basaltic crystals placed on end that are traditionally assigned to the making of kava. And the custom of kava-drinking undoubtedly comes from Polynesia; it gets into Fiji, and as far north through Micronesia as the Santa Cruz group, though it also gets in Torres Straits as far as the Murray group, and in British New Guinea west of the Fly River. It misses the Gilberts and the Marshalls; for the piper methystica will not grow on the low coral islands. But it has got into Kusaie and Ponape, the easternmost of the Caroline Islands, and gets no further west, although the Ruk group and Yap and the Pelews could easily grow the plant. The custom has continued to be of great importance in Ponape to this day. And, though there are two wild species of the areca palm growing in the island, betel-nut chewing has not reached it; in fact, it has never come further east in the Carolines than Yap at their westernmost limit.

Another revolution in the customs of Ponape points also to Polynesia as its source. In its social life mother-right is deeply rooted, as it is in the neighbouring Marshall islands. The community is divided into kins, and the man of one kin must seek his wife in another; anything else is counted incest; this is exogamy. But in Ponape, as in the Marshalls, and to a large extent all through the Carolines and Pelews, the children count themselves as of the kin of their mother; the father's property goes to his sister's children. But the chiefships in Ponape are patrilineal; there are five chiefships in the island, including Metalanim, and the successor to them all comes from the children of the dead chief. If the dynasty that held sway in Ponape and built the megalithic Venice had come from Melanesia or New Guinea, it could have fallen in with the mother-right of the people and established matrilineal descent in the transmission of rule. Hereditary chiefship could have come from Polynesia alone, the realm of father-right.

Nor were the Polynesians unacquainted with megalithic architecture. Evidence of this we have enough in the fallen giant-circle above Apia, in the trilithon and the tombs of the kings in Tonga, in the truncated pyramid-temples of the Society group, in the megalithic hill-forts of Pates Island, and in the platforms of Easter Island. Though stone-platforms are expected in the Pelew Islands and in Yap for the great clubhouses, and even for the ordinary houses, and though stone erections are occasionally to be found in Melanesia, they are all of small stones, they are not megalithic. The avenue of monoliths seen by Agassiz on Tinian and once existing also on Saipan in the Mariannes, was not of single stones but of concrete.

From these indications we find it easy to accept the hypothesis that the rulers who built this Pompeian Venice came from Polynesia, or were at least of the Polynesian stock, a stock absolutely distinct from Melanesian and Micronesian, though it may have entered into the making of both. The solid walls indicate Japanese architects.

THE MARKS OF ASIA.

But there are features in the architecture of this wonderful city that never came from the East, or from anywhere nearer than the continent of Asia. In the islands of the Pacific there are no buildings that make anything of the walls. In their houses, and even in their great community buildings, it is the roof that is all-important; it is the roof that is huge, and that is decorated. The walls are, as a rule, merely pillars, with temporary or permanent mat or reed shutters. The only exception to this is the Maori carved house, which has a large proportion of its carving and decoration on the walls; but the exception may be due to the climate. This preponderance of the roof is true of China, Siam, Burmah, and all Malaysia; the Javanese execrable Boro, the pyramidal structures of Borobudur and Brumpanam, are Hindoo. We have to go again into the temperate zone in Asia before we find walls predominate over the architecture of buildings in Manchuria, and Korea, and Japan, but especially in the last, the walls of public buildings receive as much attention as the roof.

The exceptional feature of the colossal structures of Metalanim, as contrasted with all other megalithic buildings and with all buildings in the Pacific, is the solid walls. They are from ten to fifteen feet thick. It may be argued that the material in which the architect had to work forced on him this form; the stones he had to build with are immense basaltic crystals; I measured some more than twenty feet long and above two feet in diameter. Most of them are pentagonal; but some are six-sided, others eight-sided, and many four-sided. He has built them in layers that run at right angles to each other; one layer is across the wall, the next is lengthwise along the wall like "headers and stringers." But some of the walls and platforms are only faced with these colossal crystals, the space between being filled in with small coral. In Nan Tanach the outside walls still rise in places to thirty feet after thousands of years of disintegration by the roots and branches of great trees. But it is evident that he deliberately adopted this method of architecture, for, like the Inca and pre-Inca builders of Cuzco, he shaped his stones to the place they had to fill; he broke his crystals into shorter lengths, and he used the chips and the smaller lengths to fill the crevices. Nature had already shaped and tooled them in the basaltic cliffs and dykes of Chokach, away in the north. All he had to do was to quarry them out, probably by the aid of fire and steam and levers. But when they arrived on their rafts at their destination he broke them and chipped them to suit his purpose, using the greater lengths to bind his walls together.

We may be sure that the architect had seen great buildings with solid walls. This would be had in his mind, partly from stone structures, partly from wooden. He often uses the great crystals as if they were gigantic beams, such as we see in the tombs at Nikko and in the huge temples of Japan. In the foundations of the castles and palaces of that archipelago it could have seen enormous stones used in the same way without mortar. And what seems to point to a Japanese architect or architects is a projecting frieze on the top of the inner walls of Nan Tanach, exactly like those we see in the splendid mortuary buildings of Nikko; it slopes out quite two feet beyond the wall.

PREHISTORIC JAPANESE ELEMENTS.

There are many signs in Micronesia that the existing penetration of this island world by Japanese traders is not the first in the history of the region. I was shown Japanese bronzes found deep in the coral below the forest on the highest point of Rota, in the Mariannes. The feudal society that the Spanish destroyed in that archipelago had a close likeness to Japanese feudalism; and it has been suggested that "Chamorro," the name of the people, is but a local form of "Samurai," the name of the retainers of the Japanese nobles. Even Saipan may be a form of Japan; for the people of the Carolines, who were largely recruited from Chamorro exiles, call the Japanese "Re (people) Sepan." Throughout the whole of Micronesia one can easily observe a Mongoloid element in the faces and hair; and especially is this observable in Ponape. The guide that Dr. Kersting, the Governor of Micronesia, gave us in our expedition to the ruins, Ailpin, could have been taken for a Japanese; he had black lank hair, laterally projecting cheek bones, full eyelids with slits for the eyes to peer through, and the Mongol fold over the tear duct. And he was a native of Metalanim. But it is also to be said that the youth who led us through the waterways in his canoe was also a native of the place, and he had a fine Caucasian or European face and wavy hair. Then into the languages of Micronesia there enters a distinctly Turanian or agglutinative element; there is a liberal use of the infix which separates the formative from the stem.

A GREAT OCEANIC EMPIRE.

Whoever the architect or architects of the colossal city might be, the rulers had command of unlimited labour. To quarry, raft, and haul up the inclined planes of earth or wood there would be required tens of thousands of workmen. Christian says the ruins cover eleven square miles. Even if this area were very much less, the colossal walls and breastworks would impress the imagination. Most of the stones were tons in weight; some I saw could not have been much less than thirty tons. One I saw at least half the size of the largest in the fortress of Sacsahuaman, above Cuzco, in Peru, and photographs and pictures of that are always given to show the gigantic multitudes of labourers the Incas could command. To explain the building of so titanic a city it is hard to believe that the rulers had nothing but Ponape and its people on. That island at its best could never have supported more than 20,000 people, and of these not more than 20 per cent would be able-bodied men. Of the able-bodied men of an empire not more than a fifth can be employed in such a work of luxury and superfluity as the building of this city. The rest have to raise food. This means that only 800 would be available for the task, and that is quite inadequate, as anyone who sails through the canals will testify. The empire he drew on must have been at least ten times as large as the present Ponape; in other words, there must have been many larger and more populous islands under his sway.

To allow time for the subsidence of such territories we must throw the period of such an empire back some thousands of years, in fact into the pre-bronze era. Christian in excavating in the central tomb of Nan Tanach found one piece of iron—a spear head. That probably implies a burial in it at a much later period, just as the shell beads he found in such quantities imply a later invasion from Melanesia, the coast of New Guinea, or the west of the Carolines. And there is a tradition that Idikolkol, a swarthy warrior from the south, defeated the last of the dynasty of Chau-te-Leur, and established a dynasty of his own. Chau-te-Leur is probably a dynastic name descriptive of the founder of the city, and is equivalent to Polynesian Hau-te-Rose or the Tall King, a name that would aptly fit upon a Polynesian. Like most dynasties it would shrink in its later history into luxury and degeneracy, and the original empire had evidently shrunk into one-fifth of Ponape, and the kings had ceased to be navigators, had ceased to command the sea.

If we presume the hypothesis of a Japanese or pre-Japanese architect from Japan to be correct, we may with safety place the building of this titanic Venice in the pre-bronze era. And in Japan the beginning of that era is at least three thousand years ago.

So may we picture to ourselves in the megalithic period, just before bronze, a great insular empire in the east of the Carolines formed and ruled by bold navigators and warriors from the east, stimulated to megalithic achievements by a new influx of men accustomed to quarry great stones and erect them into imposing structures. Then comes the picture of degeneracy and decay in this impressive capital by the sea. And coeval with it we may assume the evanishment of the great islands that contributed the wealth and the muscle to build so colossal a Venice. The vast proportions of the city, its ambitious plan, its enormous blocks, and the gigantic struggle with the forces of nature in the building of it are inexplicable without assuming such a buried empire and such a mighty past.

Are not ordinary corsets; they are figure builders in the true sense of the word, designed on lines combining the latest style with hygiene and comfort, and there is no figure they cannot improve. The woman who is too thin will find they soften down her angles and give her figure an exquisite rounded grace she would hardly have thought possible. They are equally helpful to the stout woman, toning down too-pronounced curves into long graceful lines demanded by fashion, and actually reducing hip measurement without the slightest feeling of pressure or discomfort. They must shape fashionably and fit comfortably if you get the right model for your figure, and

The past week has been fine and bright, and, fortunately, during the two days our distinguished visitors (the members of the British Parliamentary Delegation) were in Sydney it was ideal. First impressions always live longest in our memories, and we were glad that such beautiful weather prevailed, and there was luckily an absence of the disagreeable westerly winds. We understand that our visitors were charmed with the beauty of Sydney, and much appreciated the kind and hearty welcome extended towards them. Of special interest, too, was the brilliant ball given at Government House by his Excellency the Governor and Lady Edeline Strickland last Wednesday evening in honour of our "over sea" visitors. It is almost ten years since a State Governor gave a ball, the last being given by Lord Beauchamp. When Cranbrook was first occupied as a vice-regal residence, by our late beloved Governor Sir Harry Rawson and Lady Rawson, there was no room for entertaining on a large scale, and it was only during Lord Chelmsford's temporary absence in England that a new ballroom and other necessary improvements were made at State Government House. Several large evening receptions were held by Lord and Lady Chelmsford and also one or two small dances for young people. We are indebted, therefore, to our present Governor and Lady Edeline Strickland for reviving an honoured custom, and giving such a beautiful ball at Government House, which was thoroughly enjoyed by the invited guests. Ideal weather favoured the vice-regal host and hostess, and the evening was so calm and mild that those who cared to do so, could, with impunity, go out on the lawn, from whence there was a delightful and picturesque view of the harbour, with the lights of Sydney and North Sydney in the background. There were two bands, one to provide the dance music, and one stationed on the lawn outside, which added to the enjoyment of the scene.

The Lady Emmott and other ladies included in the British Parliamentary party expressed much regret that their time in Sydney was so short that they were unable to return calls or send cards to the many ladies who so kindly called upon them on their arrival.

Yesterday afternoon a sale of work in aid of the Ladies' Home Mission Union was held in the grounds of Bishopscourt, Darling Point, by kind permission of his Grace the Archbishop and Mrs. Wright. The opening ceremony was performed by Lady Stephen, in the presence of a large number of visitors. The sale of work will be continued this afternoon. Mrs. Wright is the president of the union, and Miss Jean Newton the hon. secretary. The object of the Ladies Home Mission Union is to interest churchwomen to work for home missions. During the past year hundreds of garments were given to the poor and comforts to invalids dispensed, the mission doing much good and silent work.

The annual meeting of the Mothers' Union was held in the Concordia Hall last Monday afternoon, and was largely attended. His Grace the Archbishop presided, and the Bishop of Goulburn gave an address, saying the movement was needed more than any other of its kind, for the future of the Empire depended upon the mothers of the rising generation. Bishop Barlow also gave those present a message from Lady Edeline Strickland, who asked him to impress on the mothers and urge on them the duties of home life, for, she said, I am beginning to think that home life in Australia is becoming almost extinct." As Lady Edeline has lived in three of the Australian States, she should speak as one who has studied the question, and her message to all mothers is, therefore, to be heeded. Mrs. Wright, Mrs. H. C. Dangar, Mrs. Christian, Mrs. Gunther, Mrs. Gaden, Mrs. Radford, Mrs. Wilfrid Docker, Mrs. Cranswick, Mrs. Armstrong, Mrs. E. Docker, Mrs. Barff, Mrs. Macarthur Onslow, Mrs. Keemmis, and Mrs. W. Mort, members of the council, and Mrs. Tayler, hon. secretary, were amongst those present.

There was a large and representative gathering of visitors last Saturday at the private view of the annual exhibition of pictures now being held by the members of the Royal Art Society, at their rooms in Pitt-street, and each day during the past week the pictures have attracted many other visitors. On Wednesday evening a committee of ladies held an "at home," to which many invitations were issued, and a bright and enjoyable programme of music and singing was contributed. Similar gatherings will be held by other hostesses during the time the exhibition is open.

Perfectly charming were the beautiful "Watteau" dresses worn by Miss Madge Titheradge in the "Marriage of Convenience," in which she appeared at the Theatre Royal during the past week. The wedding dress worn in the first act was of white satin brocade embroidered with silver, pearls, and rhinestones, and arranged with the typical panniers over a jupon of white satin, the long pointed bodice of the period, and the front of the underskirt being a glittering mass of silver embroidery, and in her powdered hair was a spray of orange blossom. Another beautiful dress was of a handsome peachy-pink brocade arranged over a petticoat of rich plain satin, with flounces of finest old lace up the front, festooned and caught with gold cords. A third dress was equally beautiful, in white and mauve brocade, lined with palest mauve satin, and worn over a jupon of white satin, and an effective narrow band of black velvet round the throat, and diamond bandeau in the hair. Quite different, but much admired, was Miss Titheradge's dress in the fourth act, of shot mauve and green silk, lined with a different shade of green satin, and worn over a petticoat of gold tissue, caught with thick gold cord and tassels, narrow black velvet ribbon being effectively worn round the neck and wrists. Miss Titheradge looked like a dainty piece of Dresden china in these beautiful brocades and satins, and exquisite old lace, things we read about, but very seldom see, all the "colourings" being so artistically blended. Mention must also be made of Mr. Waller's costumes, which corresponded with the period of Miss Titheradge's dresses. A white satin court coat edged with mink, and having beautiful French paste buttons and white satin knee breeches formed his wedding suit, the effect enhanced by the black ribbon round the neck, ornamented with paste buckles. Then there was a handsome coat of black and gold brocade, and another of beautiful blue satin embroidered with gold. With each of these the jabots of fine lace added a softness and finish that completed, with the powdered hair and patches, the delightful and picturesque clothes of the Comte de Candale in this old-world play, and which, we understand, were previously worn at the command performances given before the late King Edward at Sandringham.

In addition to the many delightful dances with which Madame Genee has been fascinating large audiences at Her Majesty's Theatre, she gave a further attraction during the past week, when she so cleverly performed her famous "hunting" dance, the gallop being given at a furious pace. The last scene is particularly bright, with the huntsmen in their red coats and the dogs all ready for "the meet." Madame Genee smilingly comes running down the hill in her riding habit and coat, tall silk hat, and riding boots, and dances merrily to the music, receiving each night undeniable evidences of appreciation in the Russian ballets and the many other clever "divertissements" of the programme are all greatly enjoyed.

The court train fell from the shoulders, being fastened with silver ornaments, and finished with ninon roses and pearls and orange blossoms, and her embroidered tulle veil was arranged over a coronet of orange blossom. She carried a bouquet of choice white flowers, and also wore a gold bangle, gifts of the bridegroom. Miss M. The court train fell from the left shoulder, and was finished with trails of satin roses. She also wore an embroidered veil arranged over a coronet of orange blossom, and carried a beautiful shower bouquet, which, with a gold basket curb bracelet, was the gift of the bridegroom. The bridesmaids—Miss Jessie McMillan and Miss Elsie Stewart—wore opal crystalline dresses draped with cream lace, also pearl Juliet caps. The interesting tree-planting ceremony at Bay-road, Wolstonecraft, on the historic Berry estate, in connection with the inauguration of the park on Wattle Day was unique from a social point of view. The gathering was of a local representative character, and included many of the leading residents, and took place on a picturesque knoll overlooking the upper reaches of the harbour, the tables being decorated with wattle blossom, waratahs, and rock lilies. The Mayoress of North Sydney, who planted the first tree, was presented with a bouquet of wattle by little Miss James. The Mayor, Alderman C. J. Walker, planted the second tree, and many ladies also put in trees. Mr R. Brennan was hon. secretary and treasurer, and it was largely owing to his efforts the park was obtained. There were many fancy sets and individual fancy costumes, and they added materially to the brilliancy of the gathering. A very large number of the gentlemen present discarded the formal black dress suit for white. The hall was prettily decorated, and the dressing-rooms and spacious supper-room and upper table being a mass of brilliant flowers and ferns. Mrs. F. G. A large number of friends assembled in the church, which was beautifully decorated with arum lilies, palms, and asparagus fern by girl friends. The bride's dress was of white crepe de chine over white satin, trimmed with beautiful old point lace, and a handsome veil over a wreath of orange blossoms, lent by an old friend of the family for the occasion. She carried a beautiful bouquet of white flowers, and also wore the bridegroom's gift, a beautiful pendant brooch of onyx and pearls. The bridesmaids were Miss Elsie List and Miss Annie Morris. A reception was afterwards held by the bride's mother, Mrs. W. List, at the Friendly Societies' Hall, North Sydney, where over a hundred guests sat down to the wedding breakfast. The same evening Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Morris left for their honeymoon for the mountains.

ENGAGEMENT.

The engagement is announced of Nora Edith, third eldest daughter of Mrs. E. R. Heeley, of Yalwa, Whaling-road, North Sydney, to Ashley William, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Craft, of Leura, New South Wales.

SALE OF BURNS'S MANUSCRIPTS.

There may be some strange developments (says the Glasgow correspondent of a London journal) over the sale, by the directors of the Liverpool Athenaeum, of the famous Glenriddel manuscrips of Burns's poems to an American millionaire for £2500. In Scotland there has been much indignation at the transaction, and it is asserted that had the directors even hinted that these rare manuscripts were to be sold the money would have been forthcoming at once to keep them in this country. According to Mr. J. C. Bring, one of Scotland's greatest authorities on Burns, Dr. Currie, in 1797, when it was arranged that he should write a life of the poet and edit his works, obtained from the widow of Burns all his papers on loan. The work was published in four volumes in 1800, but Dr. Currie appears not to have returned the papers to Mrs. Burns, but to have retained these in his possession. At his death in 1805 the papers passed to his son, Wallace Currie, whose widow it was that presented the Liverpool Athenaeum with the manuscripts in question. It is suggested that the question may be raised whether the Currie had any right to the manuscripts in question. The direct descendant of Burns, and the only one of his property, is Miss Annie Burns Burns, who resides at Cheltenham, with her niece, Mrs. Margaret Constance Burns Hutchinson. This lady, it is contended in Scotland, has a legal claim to the manuscripts which the Liverpool directors have sold. The Burns Federation and the Burns clubs of the United Kingdom would without any doubt provide the necessary funds for making good the claim were this necessary, but up to the present Miss Burns Burns has not declared her intentions.

NATIONAL SONG COMPETITION

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—In your issue of last Wednesday, a correspondent (Mr. Dowell O'Reilly) writes in connection with the verse section of the National Song Competition, closing on the 30th of this month. The writer takes strong exception to the exclusion of previously published verses, of which no one doubts there are several of conspicuous merit. But gifted writers do not exhaust themselves with one such effort, nor is it to be supposed that they would write with any reluctance, simply because a monetary reward may be added to their labour of love. A competition can only be carried out to the satisfaction of competitors if based upon the commonly accepted practice of the "Nom de plume," and the protection of adjudicators from the imputation of favouring any one competitors. A charge that would be readily made if a previously well-known set of verses were awarded the prize.

Apart from this, the donors, Messrs. Farmer and Company, Ltd., have stipulated that the prizes are for verses and music especially written for this competition. Every effort has been made by the Musical Association of New South Wales to bring this competition under notice throughout the Commonwealth. It is gratifying to be able to say that in all the States a very deep interest is being taken in this attempt to obtain an Australian national song, that will not only reflect honour on our poets and musicians, but find general acceptance in the hearts of the people. I may add to your correspondent's encomiums upon the adjudicators for the verse competition, that the Musical Association has been equally fortunate in obtaining the services of a representative musician in each State to form the adjudicating board for the selection of the best musical setting of the prize verses.

I am, etc.,

NERVOUS BREAKDOWN IS THE SPECTRE OF THE SCHOOLTEACHER.

SCHOOL-TEACHERS! YOU SHOULD KEEP YOUR NERVES SOUND YOUR FACULTIES CLEAR, YOUR SYSTEM IN GOOD ORDER, BY USING

CLEMENTS TONIC

The following is a testimony to the curative and nerve-restoring powers of Clements Tonic. One of the most brain-racking and arduous of duties is that of public school teaching, the desire to correctly train "the young idea how to shoot," to make the pupils perfect by examination time. These and other worries make nervous break-down and insomnia common ailments amongst the rank and file of public school teachers. This letter is an illustration from a lady, who for a long number of years has been a brilliant example to her profession, having held the following high appointments in the Educational Department of New South Wales. She is also known as an earnest churchworker in the district in which she lives:—

FIRST ASSISTANT FORT-STREET MODEL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
MISTRESS OF EAST ST. LEONARDS PUBLIC SCHOOL.
ASSISTANT MISTRESS CLEVELAND-STREET PUBLIC SCHOOL.
MISTRESS OF WEST REDFERN PUBLIC SCHOOL (10 years).

Generally to the world of exacting duty and vigorous intellectual labor in which each school teacher in Australia lives today, this testimony must appeal with commanding force, showing each member of the Educational Department what a nerve-soothing, insomnia-killing, and health-restoring medicine they have in Clements Tonic. All they need do is to try it and persevere with it. The rest and health are certain. Miss Cardwell writes from her residence, "Coree," 45 Booth-street, Annandale, 27/8/'13, thus:—

CLEMENTS TONIC LTD.,

"I have very great pleasure in giving my testimony to the benefits to be derived from the use of Clements Tonic as a builder up when in a run-down condition.

"When teaching in the State Schools of New South Wales, I many times resorted to its use, taking one to three bottles in course.

"The ever-constant strain on the nerves of a Public School Teacher soon brings on a low state of the whole system. In my case it was overstrain in teaching, and mental worry through family bereavements. I had been taking doctors' medicines, but seeing Clements Tonic advertised, I tried one small bottle, and feeling so much benefit from its use, got the larger size. It was such a restorator that whenever I felt the least run down I at once sent for Clements Tonic, and it never failed me. No household should be without it, or fail to use it in any case of over-strain, for I feel sure it will have the desired effect.

"I am, Sirs, gratefully yours,

(Signed) A M Cardwell.

NOT ONLY FOR SCHOOL-TEACHERS, BUT FOR ALL PROFESSIONAL PERSONS, THIS TONIC IS INVALUABLE.

Only another letter showing what Clements Tonic can do, especially in cases of poor and impure blood, or in attacks of nervous prostration, decline, or anaemia. The medicine that is the weak, nervous woman's friend is Clements Tonic, as it especially proves its value in cases of Chronic Constipation, Biliousness, Nausea, or Sickness after Eating, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Palpitation caused by distension after meals, Lassitude, or Weakness after fevers, operations, etc. A consistent and timely use of it creates health and saves much suffering. Send for it and for health at the same time. It is the agent of health to rich and poor. It keeps the blood pure, the stomach healthy, the appetite good, the nerves normal, which are the secrets of long life.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE

AND ITS EFFECTIVE PREVENTION.

Every sane person either keeps out of danger or uses reasonable precaution against it, so that the avoidance of mere accident is mostly achieved by simply keeping the five senses alert. But it is the unseen that is the real danger, the invisible menace that keeps pace with us in the street, or awaits us even in our home—the peril which we know as infectious disease. Infection is spread by organisms unseen, but intensely, stubbornly alive. We call them germs, or seeds of disease. They emanate from the bodies of affected persons, float in the air, teem in the dust and lurk in the clothing ready to infect the first susceptible victim. Cleanliness is a partial remedy, but only partial; to make it complete it must be that disinfecting cleanliness that not only drives the germ away, but kills it. The best proved agent for effecting this is Lifebuoy Soap. Reliance upon Lifebuoy Soap for the destruction of disease germs is absolutely logical—it rests on science and experience. Giving the first place to science, there is the verdict of research. By exhaustive test conducted by such experts as Mr. F. H. Molesworth, F.C.S., F.G.S., of Sydney, Dr. Enoch, of Hamburg, and other medical experts, it has been proved that even in the case of the toughest of all the disease germs their immersion in a two to ten per cent solution of Lifebuoy Soap resulted in the destruction of the disease germ. Further endorsement of the need of combining cleanser and disinfectant in fighting infection is given by all modern scientists, notably and recently in the first of the Cantor Lectures on "Antiseptics and Disinfectants," given at the Royal Society, London, by Dr. David Somerville. First and last, the verdict of this eminent scientist and his colleagues is that in fighting the disease germ there is one thing to be done, namely, to find an infallible disinfectant and to use it freely, not as a remedy, but as a preventive.

One by one the deadliest of these germs have been mercilessly isolated and pitted against a solution of Lifebuoy Soap. The germs of consumption, cholera, typhoid, carbuncle and others have successively been immersed in a solution of Lifebuoy Soap, and Lifebuoy Soap won every time, killing them beyond hope of resurrection; and if these, the toughest of their deadly tribe, were conquered, we may be sure that the others, too obscure as yet to isolate, such as influenza, measles and the dreaded small-pox itself, will similarly yield to its germ-killing power. So much for the verdict of science.

That of experience is no less emphatic. In hospitals and asylums, where the grim fight never ceases, Lifebuoy Soap is relied on; in places of public resort, theatres, churches, hotels, etc., it is Lifebuoy Soap that is used to make them clean and germ-free. Finally, the health of thousands of families and of hundreds of thousands of individuals is safeguarded by the constant use of Lifebuoy Soap in the home. But even here experience is mastering its final lesson, namely, that to prevent is better than to cure, and that there must be no omissions, no places overlooked, as a result Lifebuoy Soap, which has proved its worth in every department of home life, now completes its victory over infection in the laundry.

Lifebuoy Soap has hunted and harried and destroyed disease germs on floors and walls, in corners, under oilcloths and carpets, in sinks and drains, on tables and household vessels. It is now getting in its best work of all and winning its best results from its free use in the laundry. Here we attack the commonest carriers of disease germs—house and body linen, clothing, curtains, etc. In their folds and on their surfaces the deadly seeds of all diseases from consumption to small-pox find their last refuge. It is a deceptive refuge from which they are relentlessly hunted by Lifebuoy Soap, which confronts them as the death warrant of the disease germ. This modest factor of home equipment is worked hard on a double task, but never fails to answer the call; it cleans and disinfects in one operation.

LIFEBUOY SOAP leaves the skin clear, clean and wholesome.

LIFEBUOY SOAP cleans and disinfects the house in all its departments.

LIFEBUOY SOAP purges the clothes and house linen of the last lingering germs of infection.

LIFEBUOY SOAP ensures the fragrant cleanness of the weekly wash.

LIFEBUOY SOAP is, in the experience of the housewife, a perfect cleanser.

LIFEBUOY SOAP is, on the verdict of the scientist, a perfect disinfectant.

MONEY IN POULTRY.

The following testimony to the value of Sunlight Oil Cake as a poultry food is of interest :—

EGG LAYING STARTED.

Mrs. Florence Thompson writes :—"Not only is Sunlight Oil Cake good for cattle, but poultry. Last January I was induced to try it with a few young pullets I had. At first they did not seem to care for it, but after a few weeks ate it greedily, and do so still. The egg laying started almost immediately and, until a week ago, never failed. All through the winter I had an average of nine eggs per day from twelve fowls. Never before were they so plentiful with me, and the cause undoubtedly was the feeding on Sunlight Oil Cake. Anyone keeping fowls and hoping to have winter layers should use Sunlight Oil Cake."

VERY HEAVY LAYERS.

Mr. J. George, Grand View Street, Pymble, writes :—"I have much pleasure in recommending Sunlight Oil Cake as a valuable and economical addition to poultry feed. I have been using it for some time with excellent results in the following proportion for about twenty-five hens :—A piece of Sunlight Oil Cake about five inches square placed in the kitchen scrap dish, on which is poured the hot waste vegetable water, or ordinary hot water. The Sunlight Oil Cake will swell up about four times the size ; with this is mixed bran (1 part) and pollard (2 parts) to the quantity required for the morning meal. My birds are all the picture of health and very heavy layers. For fattening purposes, especially for ducks, a much larger proportion of Sunlight Oil Cake should be used."

SUCCESS WITH POULTRY.

Mrs. Selina Anderson, Longueville, writes :—"I have used Sunlight Oil Cake for the past seven years with poultry and ducks very successfully. I mix a little with boiling water and add it to the morning mash."

PLUMAGE IMPROVED.

Mr. W. E. Weise, Marrickville, writes :—"I have herewith much pleasure in informing you that I have used Sunlight Oil Cake for the past four years, and am a thorough believer in it. I mix it with the bran and pollard every other day, and every fowl in the yard gets a share. There is not the least doubt that it improves the plumage wonderfully, promotes the growth in young birds, and increases the egg production. I cannot afford to be without it."

FOR EXHIBITION BIRDS.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Cannon, Woodside Stud Poultry Farm, Epping, N.S.W., write :—"We have been feeding Sunlight Oil Cake to our Poultry, which we raise principally for exhibition purposes, for the past five years with gratifying results. For putting condition on young growing birds and imparting a beautiful sheen to the plumage we have found it most useful."

THE AUGUST REVIEWS.

OUR TOO DOMESTIC NAVY.

In an article in the "Fortnightly Review," Mr. Varne Light discusses the new disposition of Britain's naval forces, resulting from new international developments and the growth of other navies—notably that of Germany. For to-day, as Mr. Light points out, we find almost all the ships of the Royal Navy concentrated round the British Isles. The officers of the navy are imprisoned in the English Channel and the North Sea. In a word, the navy is becoming too domestic, and domesticity does not suit a fighting service. Ten years ago the British Navy was an organisation of world-wide influence; go where you would, you would see the White Ensign; but it is not so to-day, and with the altered state of things the spirit of the service is changing and the morale is suffering. A great proportion of these officers and men has never been out of European waters. The cumulative effect of tethering so many British men-of-war to home waters, the writer remarks, must be, and is, bad for the navy. The cause of all this concentration—there is no secret about it—is the expansion of the German Fleet; but it is suggested that the conditions which exist in the German navy would allow the detaching every autumn of one or more British squadrons for a lengthened cruise.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE AND LAND REFORM.

In an article on "Land Reform and the Chancellor," in the "Nineteenth Century," Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., severely criticises Mr. Lloyd George's land policy, directed, as it is, against small ownership. The policy of State landlordism, foreshadowed by the Chancellor, "the radical nostrum of State tenancy as a cure for agricultural ills," is characterised as a farce. Agriculture is to be regenerated by further taxing its raw material, the land, and by increasing the cost of production, raising the cost of food. "What hope for rural repopulation is to be found here?" he asks. The Lloyd George policy is contrasted with that of the Unionists, which neither prescribes nor proscribes any form of land tenure. Realising that the only method of grappling with the admitted evils of the agricultural position is the repopulation of the rural areas and the extensive resuscitation of tillage and increase of intensive culture, the Unionist policy refuses to close up any pathway to the land, "least of all that which has in all countries proved the solution of the land problem—namely, ownership."

FRENCH PATRIOTISM AND FRENCH POLITICS.

Mr. Charles Dawbarn writes in the "Fortnightly" on "Patriotism and Party in France." Referring at the outset to President Poincare's recent visit to England, he tells us that the French people have begun to realise that a representeative President is a national asset, a valuable article of exportation. He proceeds to discuss the "understanding" between the two nations, and says that, whatever British opinions may be on the subject, in France every responsible politician feels that England is bound to help her in a crisis. "Nor can the demand for a tunnel be resisted much longer. To suppose that it endangers the security of England is to cast a slur upon our professional army, and raises the incredulous smile of every military expert in the world. . . . The moment is propitious for considering the military responsibilities of England as the result of her friendship with France, a friendship founded on common interests and a common danger." But, while the three years' service is the outcome of French patriotism, the question is asked: What is England doing? In opposing the Three Years' Bill, the Combists, or Radicals, we are told, placed party before country, and by allowing politics to interfere with national sentiment the party has compassed its own destruction. "Alas! politics and patriotism play a strange, distracting game of 'chasse croise' in France. We have proof of it in such movements as the Boy Scouts, which is attacked by Catholic organs, because, they say, it is English, and inspired by the Freemasons."

HEINE ON MUSIC.

Professor Franklin Peterson, of Melbourne, has an interesting article in the "Fortnightly"—"Heine on Music and Musicians." In it we are given an admirable insight into the strange, fantastic character of Heine by one who has made a close study of the man and his writings, particularly in regard to music. We are warned against taking Heine's remarks on music and musicians too seriously, for he was prone to allow himself to be influenced largely by personal considerations, as he frequently betrays in his writings. Moreover, he was a man of strong antipathies. But he lived in a time when there were great musicians to be seen and heard, and the various glimpses he gives of musical life, of musicians, performances, criticisms, and tendencies, are all of them delightful, if they are not always the unpolluted truth. Chopin, Liszt, Wagner, Meyerbeer, Rossini, Donizetti, Bellini, Paganini, and all the lesser lights—he transports us to the actual period, "but although the musical world moves vividly and distinctly before our eyes, we see everything through spectacles which discolour, distort, and exaggerate too many details." But Heine wrote so beautifully that we can forgive him if he did not always write truthfully. Of some, however, he has written both truthfully and beautifully; and his description of Paganini stands out among many attempts to describe that wonderful man, by its vividness, convincing truth, and picturesque detail. Lovers of music will find pleasure in reading this article of Professor Peterson's.

THE FALLACY OF "ONE MAN ONE VOTE."

Mr. W. S. Lilly is a strong opponent of the principle of "one man one vote;" and in the "Nineteenth Century" he returns to the attack. In these days of universal suffrage it seems a hopeless and forlorn fight; but Mr. Lilly says it is always worth while to discharge a duty. He believes in Goethe's definition of a majority as "a few strong men who lead, some knaves who temporise, and the weak multitude who follow, without the faintest idea of what they want," and in Aristotle's dictum that "there cannot be a political community of equals." He quotes a recent German writer to show that the effect of universal suffrage has been to reduce the Reichstag's power in capacity, in characters and leaders. In France it is difficult to induce men of light and leading to undergo the degradation of public life as it now exists there. We are getting ochlocracy, or mob rule. In England those whom it is the fashion to call the masses are now the privileged class. They can swamp the rest of the electors at the polls. Their banded unions are granted immunity from laws which restrain others from tyranny and oppression. "They are suffered to carry on, in the form of strikes enforced by savage picketing, gigantic wars against the community, because the party politicians who profess to govern us are afraid of them." When every man counts for one, and no man for more than one, no matter what stake he has in the country, it is tyranny—a regimen whereby one part of the community absolutely governs the other.

"TROPICAL AUSTRALIA."

Under the above heading, Bishop Frodsham (latterly Bishop of Northern Queensland) writes in the "Nineteenth Century" about the Northern Territory, and the efforts now being made to colonise it. It appears to him just as irrational to assert the impossibility of a white race adapting itself to the conditions of Tropical Australia as it is to assert the certainty of its doing so. It is a big colonising experiment, he says—perhaps the biggest experiment of its kind that has ever been before the British people. But it is an experiment worth trying. As, however, Australia needs population everywhere, he considers that we cannot expect to find the tide setting normally towards the rich but burning lands of the northern tropics until the southern States are better filled. However, he regards railway communication as essential to development.

AUSTRALIAN EMIGRATION.

GENERAL METHODS.

(BY GRACE WATSON.)

I.

In the course of a fairly comprehensive lecturing tour of England, which has extended over two months, I have gained some idea of the difficulties which beset the intending emigrant at this end, and the unsatisfactory results of the most strenuous efforts of the agents—efforts foiled, often inadvertently, by the Australian officials, who are seriously handicapped by officialism in Australia.

I want to make it clear that it is not the fault either of the officials or the agents. It is the system—or, rather, the lack of system exhibited by every State Government in refusing to adhere to a definite policy for a definite term. For complete success in their operations, Australians simply must realise that the co-operation of agents is essential. Australian officials, to do them justice, generally realise the value of the agents (though some do not grasp their advantages as quickly as others), and find it advisable to employ them. (Of course the unreliable ones—there are a few—are soon found out.) The agents themselves, men of ability and of established reputation, naturally work hard, and then, just when things are "humming," they suddenly receive a curt official notice which nullifies their efforts. Times without number, they have been told that the requests for emigrants (made but a short time previously) are cancelled, owing to cabled instructions from Australia. This, after these men have spent much valuable time, as well as money, in advertising Australia as the land of promise for emigrants, and going to the trouble of securing good potential settlers. Admitting that a State Government cannot accept emigrants in the face of a bad season, still, contracts with agents should be fulfilled. Such serious breaches of faith by no means help in the task of securing good and desirable emigrants.

Some State officers show too conservative a tendency to rely utterly on the services of London agents. As a fact, the majority of emigrants come from the provinces, and are generally, for months beforehand, in touch with provincial agents, who often know them personally, have a more or less intimate acquaintance with their capabilities, and are consequently able to furnish them with information regarding the best possible places for their requirements. Provincial agents, too, subdue any inclination to "paint the lily," for an emigrant, who fails in Australia or elsewhere, and returns to his own district, will prove anything but an advertisement for him, and in the smaller places particularly, where everybody knows everybody else, will have a positively damning effect on his business. The services of provincial agents of established reputation could well be more generally utilised.

There is much that is objectionable, to use no stronger term, in the matter of nominated passengers. Agents are supposed—I say supposed advisedly—to receive bonuses on the wives and families of emigrants, whose husbands and fathers have preceded them to Australia, but this is rarely paid. No effort appears to be made by any Australian office to follow the matter up, and the consequence is that agents receive a bonus for one or two families in two years, being in reality entitled to more substantial rewards. Theoretically, the nominated passenger is supposed to fill in all the forms and do all the necessary correspondence with the office in London. In practice, the agent not only does all this work without payment, but he is actually out of pocket for postage expenses. It should be remembered in this connection that the majority of nominated passengers are women, without the slightest knowledge of business procedure, many of them unable even to carry out the simplest negotiations, and it never seems to occur to them that any expense is involved. In the course of three years' experience, one agent was only once offered payment for his services by a woman, which he declined. Presumably the shock was too much for the poor man. Yet the intention of the Australian Governments to pay reduced bonuses could be fulfilled, if the person nominating the emigrant in Australia were asked to specify the name and address of the emigration agent through whom he booked. In this way the Australian officials here would know where the bonus was payable.

Considerable hardship is often inflicted on nominated passengers, owing to the fact that medical inspection does not take place until the day before the steamer sails. It sometimes happens that one member of a family is ill, and is refused permission to travel for the time being, with the result that every member of the family is barred, and considerable expense incurred, pressing hardly on people in reduced circumstances. In such cases the luggage has generally been sent on ahead, and thus these people have not only to borrow money, but clothes also to keep them going until they can set sail. I cannot too strongly emphasise the necessity for the appointment of district medical practitioners, authorised to examine intending emigrants on behalf of the Commonwealth before departure for London. Such action would involve but little extra expense, and would do away with considerable unnecessary suffering.

The Australian portion of the agent's business is frequently non-paying. The bonus of £1 is inadequate, and the constant changes of the policy in the States militate against any chances of even reasonable commission. I suppose until one has had actual experience of matters at this end, it is difficult to realise the volume of work involved in the negotiations for the emigration of, say, a married farmer with a family, or a domestic. Inquiries on all sorts of subjects which matter, and all sorts which do not matter, have to be answered, and proved, fears which are often foolish, but perhaps natural to the untravelled, have to be assuaged, and then after the agent has perhaps been nursing his client for months some trifle upsets the whole arrangement and all the agent's work is thrown away. One farmer, for instance, cancelled his passage and went to Canada because of a reprinted statement in a local newspaper to the effect that there were three hundred unemployed in Melbourne. It never seemed to occur to him that in a Canadian city of the same size, it would be highly probable that the number of unemployed (at any rate during the winter), would be considerably larger.

The bonus of £1 seems to have been fixed because that is precisely the sum paid by Canada. The fact that emigrants for Canada can, of course, be obtained more readily, and in much greater numbers, does not seem to have been taken into consideration. An agent in a provincial town of two hundred thousand inhabitants can send two hundred farm workers to Canada, while his number for Australia would not exceed twenty-five. In such a case, which has come to my notice, 12 months elapsed before the men left for the Commonwealth owing to shipping disabilities, while the two hundred for Canada were shipped in half that time.

New South Wales is the only office which permits agents to deduct the bonus of £1 from the passage money. The agent has therefore to wait for many months for payment of his money, and in busy times repeated applications to a State office for payment, months after the amount is due, meet with no response. Prompt payment of accounts is the usual practice in England. There seems to be no reason why other States should not adopt the practice of New South Wales and allow the agent to deduct the bonus at once. If this were done, a needless source of irritation to the agent would be removed.

New South Wales is also the only State which keeps its offices open for the transaction of emigration business in the evening. On one day a week the office remains open until 9 o'clock. Emigrants (girls in particular) often cannot make inquiries during the day time, and here, again, the other States would benefit if they followed the example of your officials.

I wish it were possible for me to write in a more satisfactory strain of the conditions which obtain in the United Kingdom, but I know of nothing of which we have so little to be proud as our emigration methods. The State officials work hard and loyally for Australia in the face of repeated discouragement, due to the uncertainty of their Government's policy. A shower of rain, which does not fall at the moment predicted by the weather bureau, seems to be sufficient cause for a cable, which upsets arrangements which have taken months and months to consummate. The lack of uniformity in the State regulations leads to confusion at this end among agents and emigrants. It causes unnecessary expense in advertising, travelling, and other ways, and every State undoubtedly paying more than its emigrants for these reasons. The proposed co-operation between the various States is a step in the right direction, but the only satisfactory remedy for the existing confusion is the control of emigration by the Commonwealth.

IN THE GARDEN.

THE SHOWY VERBENA.

The different varieties of verbena may be classed amongst the most useful of the dwarf perennial summer and autumn flowering plants. They are hardy, easily cultivated, and produce a profusion of fairly large trusses of showy flowers of various colours. The flowers of some varieties have distinctly coloured centres, whilst others are striped and marked. In the warmer districts it is a good time of the year to plant a general collection, but in the colder parts late October will be early enough. If strong, vigorous seedlings, or plants that have been propagated from cuttings, or the younger rooted portions taken from established stools are set out, their creeping stems will soon cover the ground allotted to them, and shortly afterwards they will produce a mass of bloom, and, with ordinary cultivation, will continue in that condition throughout the hotter months. Verbenas thrive in deeply-worked, rich, sandy loam, but they do well in any friable, good soil. To obtain the best results they should be grown in a sunny, but sheltered, position. If a few varieties, especially those with brightly coloured flowers, are planted in designs or irregularly in a bed by themselves, they produce a brilliant display. They also show to advantage in rows, or in small groups. Until they become well established in their new position they should be watered occasionally in dry weather, and kept free from weeds throughout the growing period.

TEXAN PRIDE.

Texan pride is the popular name of Phlox drummondi, of which many beautiful varieties are now extensively cultivated. They rarely grow more than 12in high, and produce a profusion of bloom of every conceivable colour and shade. The flowers of some of the varieties are exquisitely marked with the richest tints; others have long-pointed and fringed petals, whilst a few have double flowers. The different forms of the grandiflora type have the largest blooms, and some of those with single colours, as, for example, the brilliant scarlet ones, produce a dazzling effect when grown in masses, or in rows. It is a good time to plant a collection in the coast and more favoured districts; but early in November will be soon enough in the colder parts. These annuals are not particular as to situation, but the best results are obtained in a sunny and sheltered position. They thrive in light, rich loam, but do well and flower freely over a lengthy period in any friable, fertile soil. The seedlings should be planted from six to nine inches apart, according to their vigour, and they will soon cover the ground allotted to them. Beyond keeping the plants free from weeds and giving them an occasional watering during the early stages of their growth, little attention is required in the way of cultivation. When the plants are well established they withstand the dry, hot weather remarkably, and the flowers are often produced in such abundance as to hide the foliage entirely. In the coast and more favoured districts, it is possible to have a continuous display of bloom from late spring till late autumn, by judiciously planting batches of seedlings at intervals from early spring till early autumn.

CONCERNING VIOLETS.

Now that the earliest violets have ceased flowering for this season the plants should receive attention, especially where they have been growing in the same bed or position long. When the plants are three or more years old the best plan is to lift and divide them, and replant the young, vigorous, healthy portions, either in new ground, or in the old after heavily manuring it, and thoroughly working the fertiliser into the soil. Generally the single-flowering varieties are hardier than those having double blooms, consequently the latter do better when planted in partial shade. All kinds thrive in rather strong, friable, deep, rich virgin loam, but they do well and flower profusely in any good soil. Where violets are grown in quantities it is best to plant them in a bed or beds four feet wide, with pathways one foot wide between them, to expedite the little cultivation that is necessary and to facilitate gathering the flowers without injuring the plants. Otherwise they may be planted as an edging to a shrubbery or a flower border. The more vigorous growing varieties should be planted one foot apart every way, and the weaker ones nine inches. During the summer months violets should be watered occasionally in dry weather, for if they are allowed to suffer from excessive dryness at the roots the next flowering season will not be a satisfactory one. A good mulch of partially decayed vegetable matter when the hot weather sets in will have a beneficial effect on the plants.

NOTES.

Gardenia globosa is now a mass of bloom, and producing an exceedingly fine effect. Its comparatively large, tubular, white flowers are very perfumed. This South African shrub has long been cultivated in some Australian gardens, but it might with advantage be more extensively planted. It thrives in any deep, friable, good soil, and is worth a prominent position in the shrubbery, and shows to advantage on a small lawn.

The spring flowering sweet peas are now beginning to bloom profusely and to keep them in that condition remove every seed pod as soon as formed. In order to maintain a vigorous, healthy growth the plants should be watered with weak liquid manure occasionally in dry weather. Soot-water is one of the safest of all fertilisers for the sweet pea; and it imparts a deep green colour to the leaves, and assists in the development of fine blooms. It is simply made by putting a peck of soot from a coal fire in a bag and allowing it to soak in seven or eight gallons of water, stirring it occasionally until dissolved. Then add 50 gallons of clear water, and with this weak liquid manure water the roots of the sweet peas as occasion demands. Sweet peas that are being grown for succession should, when sufficiently advanced, have supports fixed for their stems to climb up. In the colder districts another sowing of sweet pea seed may now be made under the same conditions as previously advised in this column.

Late pruned roses are now putting forth vigorous, healthy growth, which gives promise of producing fine flowers later in the season. Many hybrid perpetual roses and other kinds, with short-jointed wood, often develop a number of young growths, which eventually overcrowd each other to their injury. Where this is likely to occur the weaker ones should be carefully and judiciously disbudded, particular attention being paid to those which are likely to grow towards the centre of the bush, and so prevent a free circulation of air to all parts of it. The removal of these young developing shoots is easily and expeditiously effected by what is known to gardeners as the "finger and thumb" disbudding. Any suckers that develop on the stocks and roots of budded or grafted roses should be carefully cut off, or otherwise gently removed, as soon as they appear, for if allowed to grow for some time they will deprive the rose bushes of much of the sap that ought to go to the nourishment of fine flowers.

FRUIT GARDEN.

Where the weather and soil conditions were not favourable in autumn for planting a general collection of evergreen fruit trees, such as members of the citrus family, and guavas, loquats, etc., the work may now be taken in hand and completed as soon as circumstances will permit. Citrus trees from which the crop has been gathered may now be pruned should they require that attention. The pruning will consist principally of taking out all the dead and superfluous wood, removing the weaker of those shoots that override each other, and shortening the straggling and too vigorous growths that are likely to prevent the formation of a symmetrical head. It is a good time to manure the ground, if not already rich in plant food, about citrus trees from which the fruit has been gathered. The quantity of manure to apply will, of course, depend upon the fertility of the land, but citrus trees require a fertiliser that is rich in potash and phosphates. Should more vigorous growth be desired a little nitrogenous manure, such as dried blood, distributed on the surface about the roots of the trees, will have the desired effect.

Passion vines may now be planted about 15 feet apart at the base of a trellis, or wooden fence, to which their stems should be trained. These plants thrive when grown in well-worked, deep, rather light, rich soil, but do well in any well-drained, fertile, friable land.

Grape vines are now bursting into growth, and all the weaker and superfluous budding shoots should be rubbed off with the finger and thumb. Doing this now will save much labour later in the season with the knife.

Attention should now be given to the codlin moth. As soon as the blossoms have fallen from apple and pear trees the young fruit should be thoroughly sprayed with some reputable remedy to prevent it being attacked by this pest. One of the best insecticides to keep the moth in subjection, if not entirely extirpate it, is made by adding two pounds of arsenate of lead to 50 gallons of water, and thoroughly mixing it before using. If the moths are numerous a second spraying may be necessary in about 20 days after the first application.

MENDELISM.

WORK OF WILLIAM BATESON.

(BY H. G. CHAPMAN.)

Gregor Johann Mendel was born in 1822 in Austrian Silesia, of German parentage. His father was a small farmer, much interested in the culture of fruit. Mendel was a bright lad, who made such progress with his school work that his family by a generous economy taxed their resources to give him a good education. Their sacrifice was nobly repaid in later years. On the completion of his studies he entered the Augustinian Monastery of Brunn, where he passed the greater part of his life. At the expense of the cloister he went for two years to the University of Vienna, whence in 1853 he returned to Brunn. There he was engaged in work as a teacher, until in 1868 he was elected Abbot of his monastery, the famous Konigskloar. The experiments that have made his name famous were conducted in the large garden of the convent. They commenced with his novitiate in 1845, and ended some years after his election as Abbot. The classical observations on peas were begun in 1856, concluded in 1865, communicated to the local scientific society, and published in 1866. They attracted little or no notice. Mendel sent a copy of his paper to the celebrated naturalist Naegeli. Naegeli was unfortunately not impressed by the paper, and failed to see the value of the methods used. Two years later Mendel published some further experiments on a daisy. With these papers his contributions to science ended, though he made a series of observations on bees, of which no records have been found, despite careful search for them. An unfortunate controversy with the Austrian Government about the payment of taxes on religious houses embittered his occupancy of the Abbot's chair. The failure of his scientific work to attract attention affected his disposition, so that his last years were spent in depression and melancholy. It is probable that at this time he destroyed his notes on bees. The hives are still in the monastery, now shown to the visitor with pride, but the records of the labour of the master with their occupants have passed away with him. In 1884 he sank to rest. How proud must be the scientific society of Brunn—a town not so large as Maitland—of its former member and president, and of its journal for publishing the original contributions of its members. Without it the world might have waited a century or more for its glimpse into the manner of the transmission of character. Six years after Mendel's death three great botanists, De Vries, Correns, and Tschermak published papers giving accounts of Mendel's work and confirming it. In the 12 years that have elapsed since 1890 more than 1000 papers have been published recording the results of experiments made in the same way. Mendel owed his success to the clearness of thought he brought to bear on heredity.

He realised that it was necessary to start with pure-breeding materials, to consider each character separately, on no account to confuse different generations together, and finally to keep separate the progeny of distinct individuals. All these ideas were quite new in his day. He applied these notions to the breeding of peas. Selecting six characters he observed their appearance in successive generations. By considering one character, height, the nature of these results may be examined. It is a matter of common knowledge that two well-defined kinds of peas occur, tall peas and dwarf peas. Mendel commenced by crossing a tall pea with a dwarf pea, and keeping the seeds formed in the pods. Sowing these seeds he found that the plants produced were all tall. The flowers of these tall plants were allowed to self fertilise, i.e., the flowers were fertilised by pollen of the same plant. The seeds that were formed were sown next season. The plants that resulted were of two kinds, tall and dwarf. When they were counted it was found that there were three tall to one dwarf plant. The flowers of each of these plants was allowed to self-fertilise, and the seeds of each plant kept separately. From the seeds of the dwarf plants none but dwarf plants developed; from the seeds of some of the tall plants none but tall plants grew, and from the seeds of the rest of the tall plants both tall and dwarf plants resulted. When the numbers of these tall plants were counted it was found that of every three plants one was a tall plant, bearing seeds that gave rise only to tall plants; the other two bore seeds which gave rise to both types of plants. The dwarf plants obtained in the second generation were found to bear only dwarf plants, even when cultivated for several generations. It was thus a pure-breeding dwarf pea like its grandparent. The tall plants with seed giving tall individuals were also true-breeding tall peas. The remaining plants were hybrids, from which by in-breeding true-breeding dwarf plants, true-breeding tall plants, and hybrids in the proportion of one, one, and two respectively could be obtained in the next generation.

"The most important fact noted in these observations is the segregation of whatever it is that gives rise to tallness and to dwarfness in the plant. If it be supposed each plant bears two units, either two dwarf units, two tall units, or a dwarf and a tall unit, one derived from each parent, it becomes easy to explain the numerical occurrence of the plants. It will be seen that one unit masked the other. This character in the case considered, tallness was called dominant by Mendel, the masked character dwarfness being named recessive. It must be noted that so far one character only has been examined. The five other characters behave in the same way, but while the different characters were arranged in a certain way in the parent they became separated in the offspring. To take a simple example, the tall parent had green seeds, the dwarf parent yellow seeds. Each of these properties, height and colour of seed, behaves as described above, but if we consider them both together we find that in one of 16 plants in the second generation we get a dwarf plant with green seeds which breeds true. It has thus been possible to obtain in two generations, a new plant possessing the original dwarf character, but to which the green colour of the seeds has been transferred. In this lies the practical application of Mendelism, which has been used by Biffen in raising new types of wheat. It may be necessary to raise a large number of seeds to get sufficient plants, but it is now known that the plant endowed with the required characters must occur in the second generation. This constitutes a great advance on the previous empirical method of breeding.

The most prominent British biologist to recognise the value of Mendel's work after its recovery was William Bateson, afterwards Professor of Biology in the University of Cambridge. Already an earnest student of the other problems of heredity, having gathered together a vast array of facts about variation in animals and plants, Bateson only required an acquaintance with the illuminating research of Mendel to enable him to apply the new means of study to the breeding of many kinds of animals and plants. In 1902, after 12 years' work he put forward a defence of Mendelism, which was expanded in 1909 into the Principles of Heredity, a work which by universal consent gives the best account of the progress made from Mendel's investigation, and is likely to become a biological classic.

Bateson has extended considerably the scope of research on the Mendelian lines. Among his discoveries are some of general interest. Thus he has found that a hybrid may differ entirely from its parents. One notable example of interest to poultry-breeders may be mentioned. Andalusian fowls are blue in colour. Though regarded by breeders as a pure form, they are known not to breed true, but to produce among their offspring forms entirely different from themselves. These are known to fanciers as "wasters." When Andalusian fowls are crossed they give rise to blue Andalusian fowls and "wasters" of two kinds, black fowls and splashed white fowls. Bateson noted that on the average one black fowl, one splashed white fowl, and two blue fowls were produced. This numerical ratio led him to suspect some Mendelian phenomena. He found that when the black fowls were bred together they bred true, giving none but black chicks. When splashed white fowls were bred together they also bred true, and produced only splashed white offspring. In other words, both kinds behaved like purebred fowls, breeding true to their types. The two "wasters," black and splashed white, were crossed, and the offspring consisted of blue Andalusian fowls. The blue Andalusian fowl was therefore a hybrid, with colour differing from that of each parent. The fancier who sold his "wasters" was losing the best opportunity of breeding his desired chickens. There is no better example of the value of scientific knowledge for a practical purpose. By saving the "wasters" and by breeding from them, blue Andalusians can be obtained every time.

As Huxley was the champion of Darwin, fighting the battle of the origin of species and the evolution of living things, so Bateson has been the champion in Britain of the dead Abbot of Brunn. He has mainly devoted his attention to those aspects of the question of utilitarian importance. He has disseminated among medical men information about the inheritance of human bodily peculiarities, and has made it possible to lay down some sound rules by which advice may be given as to their possible inheritance. A medical man can now say with certainty when some peculiarity may be transmitted, and, what is more important, when the peculiarity will not be transmitted. Again, Bateson has communicated his enthusiasm and industry to others who have studied subjects likely to be valuable to mankind. Mention may be made of his influence on Biffen, who was led to try to produce wheat resistant to rust by the application of Mendelian laws. It is well known how successful was Biffen's attempt. This success led Biffen to breed out other new combinations of characters in wheat, and to place a whole series of wheat seeds endowed with different properties at the disposal of the farmer.

THE REMEDY THAT MADE THIS PALE, LISTLESS GIRL BRIGHT AND ACTIVE IS THE REMEDY YOU NEED IF YOU ARE ANAEMIC, WEAK AND RUN DOWN.

The experience of this Newcastle girl, Miss Sarah Price, of George Street, Tighe's Hill, shows the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to those who are weak and bloodless.

"Some time back I was inclined to be anaemic, and a chill I caught sent me to bed for a fortnight," said Miss Price. "When I was able to get up I was in a very weak state. I had no appetite and could rarely force down a mouthful; my lips and gums were bloodless. I was learning dressmaking at the time and would come home fairly done up. I always felt dreadfully tired, and would only mope about, never caring for amusement. My head ached constantly; I never slept well and was always low spirited. Mother thought Dr. Williams' Pink Pills might do me good, so I tried them. With the first box I felt better and soon I began to eat heartily and quite enjoy my food. I got stronger every day, and could notice the improvement in my color. All the dragged out tired feeling went. The third box set me right altogether. As to headaches I am never troubled with them now."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are valuable in all diseases where the blood is at fault, as in Anaemia, Chlorosis, after effects of Influenza and Fevers, Headaches and those run down conditions of the health, due to overwork, worry or nervousness. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers or direct by mail at 2/9 per box, six boxes 15/3, by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. of Australasia, Ltd., Sydney.

SPECIAL NOTE—If you decide to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills don't be put off with anything else.

REAL ESTATE.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The real estate market is very changeable of late. One week it shows most definite signs of improvement, the next week it drops back to almost a state of absolute quietude. Last week everybody was busy. This week just the opposite. But it is not anticipated that this spirit of fluctuation will last; there is underlying this uncertainty of what a week may bring forth, an activity, which must, as the summer opens up, galvanise into permanent life and prosperity a market which has passed through a rather quiet winter.

This was an off week for indoor sales, only two taking place. The catalogues submitted contained but few properties of an attractive character, and for these there was a fair amount of bidding, but the reserves were not reached in a number of cases, and the properties were passed in for private treaty.

Messrs. Hardie and Gorman disposed of a very fine property at Canley Vale, at Wednesday's sale, for £1070. It consisted of two cottages—The Bungalow and Glenleigh—with farm-like surroundings. There is a big demand for farm properties in this district of late. In fact, farm properties anywhere handy to town are now being sought after, but at Canley Vale land values have risen of late very considerably, and as much as £3 per foot has been paid for the choice corners adjoining the railway station.

At the same sale on Wednesday there was a fair amount of competition for several villas at Lavender Bay, but the reserves were not reached, and the whole of the four properties were passed in.

Messrs. Richardson and Wrench had only a small list to submit yesterday, but a cottage in Newtown was disposed of for £490. During the week the same firm sold a residence and land on the Wandeen Estate at Beecroft for £1400. There has been a demand for land, rather than house property, this week. At Epping and Eastwood, for instance, quite a number of inquiries have been made for blocks. Messrs. Richardson and Wrench sold two lots of the Chesterfield Estate at Epping for £222, also two lots at Eastwood House Estate for £260. This works out at from 35s to £2 per foot; that is the ruling price at Epping to-day for land, which 18 months ago could have been obtained for £1. Values are likely to rise still higher in the approaching season at places along this line, especially at Epping.

At Ashfield South Messrs. Richardson and Wrench sold a block of land for £372. They also sold four lots of the Premier Estate, Dee Why, for £124, three lots of the Delmar Estate in the same district for £198, and a block of land on the Quinton Estate, Manly, for £200.

Most of Berry's Estate, at Wollstonecraft, is now sold. Of the few blocks obtainable, two were sold this week by Messrs. Hardie and Gorman at £5 per foot, and a block in the Blenheim Estate, at Randwick, realised £6 per foot.

It is astonishing the demands by workmen for allotments along the Bankstown line. Bankstown itself continues to make rapid but solid advance. On the Condell Estate Messrs. Arthur Rickards and Co. sold this week no less than 14 blocks, ranging from 30s to £3 per foot. The Greenacre Park Estate is all gone, and any single allotment that may come into the market is quickly bought up. At Punchbowl, adjoining Bankstown, this week Messrs. Arthur Rickard and Co. sold seven blocks, and quite a number of lots at Auburn and other suburbs. This is evidence of the popularity of the easy terms system which the firm adopts for the benefit of the working classes.

Mr. C. H. Crammond this week sold a residence and grounds on the Moorefield-road, Homebush, for £1500; a cottage in Stanton-road, Haberfield, for £861; a cottage at Herlstone Park, for £925, and a block of land at Cronulla, for £600.

Land along the French's Forest-road, between the 9th and the seventh, has taken quite a spurt this week, as far as demand is concerned. For years no person troubled about this district, and it was almost impossible to give the land away. But a change has come over the scene, and several holders have been bought out this week at £10 per foot. A private syndicate is being formed to purchase another very large area in this district for £2500, the intention being to hold on to the land for a few years. Rapid development is evidently expected, and there is no doubt that North Sydney and Mosman, being overcrowded, population must spread in the direction indicated.

Amongst the recent sales by Mr. W. F. Kay is Captain Hedge's property, of 44 acres, at Fairfield, the price realised being £2000. The same firm has also sold this week land opposite Fairfield station, at £6 and £8 per foot. These are, of course, shop sites, but it gives an idea of how this place is improving.

Messrs. Myler and Cashman have had a successful week, having sold quite a number of properties at Five Dock and Canterbury, ranging in prices from £425 to £1750. The vacant land brought up to as high as £12 per foot at Five Dock.

This week Messrs. F. Glasson and Co. sold four shops and a cottage, off George and Russell streets, Bathurst. The purchasers were Mr. F. Coots, and Mrs. Heath. The prices obtained totalled about £3200.

SUBDIVISION WORK.
SEASON OPENS TO-DAY.

The Saturday subdivision sales for 1913-14 commence to-day. Messrs. Hardie and Gorman will open the season with a sale at Randwick of the Moore Estate. From its beginning Randwick has been one of the most favoured suburbs near Sydney, of the better class of professional and business gentlemen until to-day its leadership as a perfect home-building suburb is fully recognised.

Always a progressive and refined community of artistic homes and the best improvements, it attracts a class of people for whom a healthful, accessible, and charmingly situated locality are important recommendations, and evidence a great prospective value. The neighbourhood is select in the strictest conception of the word. The homes modern and artistic in design, their beauty enhanced by many shade trees and profusely-flowered gardens, the roads well made and finished, the gas lighting conveniences adequate, but to be superseded by more modern and economical means—electric light. The City Council is under contract to light the whole of the municipality of Randwick by January 1, 1914, and is now canvassing householders. For healthfulness, Randwick takes first rank. Its hygienic conditions generally are unsurpassed. The tram service is regular and rapid, while fares are reasonable. Trams to the city, Waverley, Coogee, and railway run at frequent intervals throughout the day, and still more frequently during the hours of going to and from business. Sydney is reached under the half-hour. With such conditions of life obtainable in Randwick, it is not to be wondered that there is always a demand for centrally-situated property in this locality. Included in the work to be submitted to-day is one on which the residence, Parchane, is built. This lot and building will be offered as one. It is a two-story premises, built of stone, and containing 7 rooms, hall, kitchen, and out offices.

There are several sales booked for next Saturday. One is the Eastwood orchard homes, to be submitted by Messrs. Arthur Rickard and Co. This fine property is situated in the heart of the famous Eastwood-Carlingford fruit country, and is convenient to three stations, and a little over half an hour's train journey from the city. It adjoins the township of Dundas. In fact, is right alongside the town hall, church, etc. The soil is good, and the country undulating and cleared of timber. Buyers can have choice of home sites, from 50 x 200, fronting the main roads of the district, or fine, handy-sized orchard blocks, from one to four acres. The estate has a fine elevation, and, in addition to being most healthy, commands magnificent views of the surrounding country.

Another sale next Saturday that is sure to prove attractive, and for which many inquiries have been made, is the Lansdowne Estate, at Canley Vale, to be submitted by Messrs. Hardie and Gorman. There are 76 large home sites, with areas from half to three-quarters of an acre, situated between the main southern road and the railway. Five minutes from the railway station, with delightful water frontages to Prospect Creek, practically George's River, which is navigable by motor or sailing boat right to Botany Heads, and within a pleasant walk of some fine vineyard and orchard properties.

Messrs. Richardson and Wrench will open the season by a sale next Saturday of six splendid building sites at Ryde. The land fronts Falconer and Park streets. The same firm have another sale at Gladesville on November 1.

Messrs. Walker Bros. open the season with a sale at Cammele on Saturday, October 4, of Rowan's residence and grounds, which has been subdivided.

On Saturday, 20th inst., there are several sales on the Bay, including Northbridge, beyond the Suspension Bridge, which is to be offered by Messrs. Raine and Horne. Already there has been a big demand for lithos, and general inquiry has been instituted. Another sale on the same day will take place at Sylvania, on George's River, to be conducted by Mr. H. C. V. Broughton. This subdivision is known as the Gwawley Estate. There are 55 acres, subdivided into attractive building sites. The week-ender's spot, with frontages to roads ballasted in conformity with the shire's requirements. Captivating views of George's River and its pretty reaches, near to the National Park and the far-famed Cronulla Beach.

On the same day Messrs. Hardie and Gorman will offer the Hurstville Oval Estate, consisting of 57 good building sites.

Arrangements are being completed for a busy season at Cronulla. Mr. Arthur Rickards will, before the season ends, submit a very fine estate in this district, and this week Mr. C. Monro, one of the local agents, reports having sold a block of land in Cronulla, for subdivision, in conjunction with Messrs. H. W. Horning and Co., for £2250. Mr. Monro has also the following sales booked—Bonnie View Estate (water frontage), on Eight-Hour Day; Pick of Cronulla Estate (ocean frontage), October 18; Kentdale Estate (ocean frontage), November 15; Ontario Estate, November 29; another estate on November 22; Fowler's Estate, on Boxing Day; and several others, the dates of which are not yet fixed. Several of these estates comprise the best land yet submitted in Cronulla, and should realise big prices.

During November—"Concord Park Estate" No. 2, which is immediately adjoining Concord Park, and has similar frontages to the tram line, will be offered by Messrs. Batt, Rodd, and Purves. The allotments are being cut into various size so as to meet the requirements of the different purchasers.

This firm are also pushing on with the arrangements for their most important sales of the season, "The Sunnybank Estate," which practically adjoins the well-known "North Bridge Estate" over the Suspension Bridge. This extensive and well-situated estate embraces practically the whole of the land between High-street, Willoughby, and the waters of Middle Harbour, to which many water frontage allotments will be cut. Several cottages have already been erected on the estate by the company who announce they are prepared to sell on very easy terms, and to build for intending purchasers if desired.

In addition to the sale at Concord at readers mentioned, there will be offered a subdivision, the well-known "Alton Estate," which is delightfully situated on the main Concord road, and close to where the new Strathfield north railway station will be erected.

Advantage will be taken of the holiday season to offer at auction, a very desirable subdivision at Woy Woy, to meet the requirements of week-enders, and those desirous of obtaining small holdings for cultivation.

PROGRESS OF THE SUBURBS.

XIV. WOOLLAHRA.

NO. 1.

Having outlined the progress of the northern, western, and southern suburbs, which are served by railways, we now turn our attention to the east, and here we find Sydney's oldest and most wealthy group of suburbs, chief among which is Woollahra. The eastern suburbs have always been regarded with favour by the people of Sydney for residential purposes, while Woollahra, with its picturesque surroundings, its panoramic views, and its extensive grounds, always appealed to the wealthy business men of the city as a suitable district in which to erect palatial residences, and for such homes Woollahra has always been noted, but the scene is gradually changing. The large residences and extensive grounds are gradually disappearing, and in their place are found modern cottage homes, with pretty gardens surrounding them, but nothing more. Land taxations and local government assessments on the unimproved capital value basis are responsible for this change. Even wealthy people to-day cannot, in many cases, afford to pay such heavy charges, with a result that owners of many large and valuable properties have been compelled during recent years to reduce the size of their holdings, and to subdivide portion of the grounds surrounding their homes. This, of course, has changed the general appearance of some of the best positions in Woollahra. It also brought many idle lands into the market, and to-day sites which were sandhills a few years ago are now covered with houses, which face well-made streets and footpaths.

But Woollahra has an interesting history, which dates back nearly a century. It was on February 16, 1820, that Governor Macquarie signed a deed granting to John Piper, an Imperial officer of the Crown, whose position was that of collector of internal revenue, 190 acres of land, situated in what is to-day one of the finest positions in Woollahra, viz., Point Piper, and back to where Cranbrook is built. The only condition attached to the grant was that Piper must pay quit rent to the extent of 4s per year, but if any person to whom land had been granted in those days paid 20 years' quit rent one sum, that released them from any further payments. Captain Piper took advantage of this concession. Piper also received other grants of land in Woollahra, but as will be seen later he failed to take these up. He did not even hold on to the 190 acres of beautiful Point Piper, for we find that in 1826, four years after the deed of grant was executed, Piper, who had evidently got into monetary difficulties, was compelled to realise, and he disposed of the 190 acres to the wealthy merchants of George-street of the names of Daniel Cooper and Solomon Levey. They paid Captain Piper £6000 in sovereigns for the 190 acres, and the deed conveying this land to Cooper and Levey was jointly signed by Captain John Piper and his wife, Ann Piper. Those were the days when the Dower Act was in existence—days when John Piper, like every other man, said at the marriage altar to his bride, "Thee I endow with all my lands," etc. Consequently, when a sale of property took place after marriage, the wife became a consenting party to the transaction, and jointly the husband and wife signed the deed of conveyance.

The George-street merchants Cooper and Levey, having now become possessed of a fair slice of the Woollahra lands, were on the lookout for more. Just at this time soldiers' grants were being issued in Woollahra and other places. These were simply issued on pieces of paper. They had no deeds given them. Cooper and Levey bought up a number of these grants, and that is really where the story of buying a block of land in Sydney for a bottle of rum comes in. The soldiers did not want the land. It was given to them to induce settlement in the country, but their minds and their hearts took them back to "Merry Old England," and all they thought of in Sydney was a good spree, to gain which they readily parted with their grants. It was also during this time that Cooper and Levey bought up these grants, but they were without deeds for much of the property, and there were also a number of Crown grants in existence which had for some reason never been taken up, and as a result we find that in March, 1830, a deed of grant, duly signed by Governor Darling, was issued to Daniel Cooper and Solomon Levey conjointly, conveying unto them in Woollahra for a consideration a consolidated grant of 1130 acres, being consolidation of the following grants previously made, but for which no deed had been executed, viz.:—William Jenkins, 40 acres; William Piper, 80 acres; John Foster, 80 acres; Thomas Garton, 40 acres; Thomas Benson, 80 acres; R. Partridge, 80 acres; T. Hall, 80 acres; J. Brian, 60 acres; W. Bradley, 80 acres, and John Piper, 300 acres. It will thus be seen that, in addition to the 190 acres sold by Captain Piper to Messrs. Cooper and Levey, he also had 580 acres in Woollahra granted to him which he never took possession of. Messrs. Cooper and Levey were now possessed of 1320 acres of the lands of Woollahra, and as the present-day municipality consists of 3681 acres, it will be seen that these gentlemen were the original owners of about three-fourths of what afterwards became an incorporated area. The deed of grant for the 1130 acres, which the writer had the privilege of perusing this week, and which in size resembles a page of the "Herald," contains some clauses of interest. It states that the grant was issued by Governor Darling in accordance with the powers made by his predecessors, and for a consideration, and as that consideration was is not mentioned, but here is no doubt it was a monetary consideration. There was a quit rent to be paid on the 1130 acres of £1 2s per year, but the same year W. Macpherson, Collector of Internal Revenue, gave Mr. Cooper a receipt for 22 for quit rent. This indicated that Cooper and Levey also took advantage of the clause providing that a person by paying 20 years' rent in one sum would be exempt from further yearly payments. Messrs. Cooper and Levey thus redeemed their quit rent on both grants. It was also mentioned in the deeds of grant issued to both Piper and Cooper and Levey that the Crown reserved the right to make a road through this large estate, and in the year 1853 the New South Head-road was constructed, and it is the main thoroughfare to South Head to-day. To make this road the Government was obliged to take over a strip of land running right through Cooper and Levey's estate, but these gentlemen were given by Governor Fitzroy nearly 15 acres of the water frontages of Double Bay in compensation; and as this afterwards became valuable land, they did not do too badly. This very fine estate of Messrs. Cooper and Levey now included portions of Double Bay, whole of Rose Bay and Bellevue Hill, back to Old South Head-road, and along that thoroughfare to Oxford-street near the top end of Paddington. But three years after these gentlemen became possessed of all these lands of Woollahra, and more especially the Woollahra, and more especially the Woollahra, and more especially the

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

THIS IS THE OPPORTUNITY FOR WHICH SO MANY WAIT—THE OPPORTUNITY TO BUY AT PIANOLA HALL ONE OF THE HIGH-GRADE, LITTLE-USED PIANOS, WHICH HAVE BEEN EXCHANGED BY WEALTHY CUSTOMERS OF THE PIANOLA COMPANY FOR THE PIANOLA PIANO.

THE
OF USED PIANOS
AT PIANOLA HALL
COMMENCED ON MONDAY.

Sale of Used Pianos at Pianola Hall are different—radically different from second-hand piano sales held elsewhere. Each year these events attract an unusual class of purchasers—music teachers, musicians, and discriminating people who appreciate a saving in price, but would never consider a piano in which musical quality was sacrificed for mere cheapness.

Many styles of the PIANOLA Piano, such as the Steinway, Weber, or Steck, Grand PIANOLA Pianos, are magnificent and costly instruments. The homes to which they go are homes of wealth and refinement, and the pianos which they displace are splendid, high-grade makes in keeping with their surroundings.

These are the pianos offered in this Sale. To call them "used" pianos is actually misleading, as the majority of them are here because their owners could not use them, and wanted in their place the PIANOLA Piano, the Piano which everyone can play.

We invite you to look at the specimen values shown here. Whatever may be your piano need, whether you desire a famous grand for your drawing-room, an upright for your children's nursery, or a piano for your summer home, you will find an instrument eminently suited for your purpose—an instrument with a name that stands for quality—an instrument in beautiful condition, which you may purchase at but a part of its usual price.

ON THE LAND.

FARM AND STATION.

THE FLYER.

The first year on his own feet was the Grey Kangaroo's most anxious time. His unfortunate race being frequently hunted by men and dogs, he had ever to be on the watch, and to depend almost wholly on his speed to elude them. When he was 18 months old he cared nothing for the ordinary dog, for he was then a flyer. His pace had reached its greatest limit at this period—between 18 months and three years; but the fierce-fighting, swift-footed kangaroo-dog he dreaded as much as he did man. He was not regular in his habits; he fed and moved about much at night, and also in the day when other marsupials were asleep; and though gregarious he was often alone, especially when the mob had been hunted and scattered. After one such adventure he came to a halt in the middle of a clear valley, where he could see for a good distance around him. For minutes he sat erect on his tripod, in which excellent position he was alert to see, to hear, and smell. Nothing of an alarming nature appearing, he dropped down on his hands and started feeding. An economical, watchful feeder, he cropped all the grass within reach before moving on, his big incisor tooth clipping it to the very roots like a pair of shears. He had two of those sharp, knife-like teeth in the lower jaw, and six in the upper; and in either jaw two premolars and eight molars—or 28 teeth in all. When, feeding round, his tail caught against a tussock or other obstacle, he stepped over it one leg at a time, and when he had completed the circle he shifted to a fresh patch, placing his hands on the ground and lifting himself along. By and bye, he moved on all fours into the shade of a tree, and putting his tail between his legs, for awhile amused himself by scratching it with his hands. Then, being in a peaceful locality, he lay full stretch on his side for a sleep.

The peace was short reigned. A crackling noise, like a thousand stockwhips swinging down the adjacent hill, woke him, and he bounded up in alarm. Sweeping swiftly on to him was a terrible bush fire, whose face extended farther than he could see on either hand. Flying before it, badly scorched, he saw his small relative, the Palpoo, who had been caught asleep in his grass nest, and close behind him trotted a sacred bandicoot, who had been similarly awakened. He waited to see no more. Already the suffocating smoke was around him, and red cinders singed his grey fur. Across the valley and over the low hills he sped for his life. Ever behind him roared the long line of fire, the wind-driven flames rivalling his own tremendous leaps. Just when it seemed that victory would be his another great blaze appeared in front of him. Nonplussed, he stopped, and hot, panting, and terrified, looked desperately from one to the other. Down between the rapidly-closing lines, his red tongue lolling out, dashed a frantic dingo. In face of the common foe he did not fear the dog, while the latter had such a pressing engagement elsewhere that he had no thought for anything else. He knew of a waterhole just ahead, and there being no alternative course, the grey flyer dashed after him. Both plunged into the water, the dingo crouching under the bank, the kangaroo standing up to his ears in the middle, and as the flames shot over he ducked down until only his nostrils were above the surface. As soon as the fire had passed the dingo crept out. He squatted on the bank, and licking his chops looked hungrily at the kangaroo. He was too cunning to go into the water after him, and the latter was too wise to get out while the dog was there. When he moved into shallower water, the dingo trotted round to intercept him. His long oval ears drooped in sympathy with his depressed spirits, his eyes smarted from the smoke, and tears trickled down his cheeks. Miserably, for an hour, he played a waiting game. It was then sundown. He was beginning to shiver with cold, and as the day waned he became very anxious.

He moved towards the shore again, with the object of inducing his enemy to make a spring. To his surprise that wily animal spun round and sped away, as though seven demons were after him. The next moment a big domestic dog, who had turned off a road near by to get a drink, trotted up to the hole. He was not as shrewd as the dingo, for as soon as he saw the kangaroo he gave an exultant yelp and jumped in after him. The grey flyer stood like a statue until he came within reach. Then, quick as a flash, he clutched him by the neck and thrust him down. Hugging him as a bear hugs his victim, he held him under until his struggles ceased. Out on the road a man whistled for the dog, hearing which the victor hastily clawed his way out of the waterhole, and set off in search of his mates. A thousand fires lit up the blackened hills. Trees and limbs fell crashing to the ground, volumes of flame shot up through hollow trunks, transforming the doomed trees into gigantic torches, and now and again a loud explosion and a shower of sparks caused him to give a wild, involuntary leap, and halt abruptly to listen. Naturally timid and suspicious, such strange things kept him continuously simmering in a state of dread uncertainty. In the usual cautious manner of his kind, he would hop along for a dozen paces, then stop, and for a moment or two sit back on his tail. At that ordinary pace he covered from 12ft to 18ft at a bound, but when something startled him he leaped 20ft to 25ft.

Steering a straight course for a sandy mound on which the mob were wont to camp, there he found the old leader and a dozen others cropping the short couch grass, the only patch nearabouts that had escaped the fire. He camped there the following day, and feeling fresh by midafternoon, engaged in a sparring contest with a buck of his own size. They boxed well—feinting, blocking, and tapping each other's ears in a masterly way. In the play neither attempted to use the formidable long toe on the hind foot, that was reserved for the serious contests that eventuated a few days later. There were five claws on each of the short fore-limbs, which well served the grey flyer when digging for roots, for he liked a few roots with his grass diet; and in days of famine, when all the surface fod was burnt off, he had to do a good deal of grubbing for sustenance. In the hind feet, the first toe was wanting, the second and third were short and slender, and bound together in the same skin as the fourth, so that only the sharp claws protruded. The fourth, or long toe, was very long and powerful, furnishing the main support to the body, and the fifth of medium size. It was courting time with the kangaroos, when the male Macropus was not in a playful humour in respect to other bucks. There were fierce conflicts among them for possession of the does. Finding one by herself, the Grey Flyer made passionate love to her, patting and caressing her with his hands, and friskily whacking the ground with his tail.

In the midst of his ardent wooing another young buck came on the scene. The tender sparkle in the wooer's brown eyes changed to a look of ferocity. Smarting from many rebuffs, he leaped at him. The rival met him with a kick, which only incensed him the more. Getting to close quarters, he hugged him, and clawed him, whilst the rival as strenuously retaliated. At the same time the hind feet were striking and ripping, though the bodies were too close, and rocing too much in each other's embrace for an effective blow. At last the Flyer, holding his opponent by the neck, and leaning back, struck him a sweeping blow in the side, the sharp nail cutting down like a knife. A second blow with the other foot knocked him off his balance, and he hopped stiffly away. The victor, bleeding from many scratches, but with his ardour unabated, returned to his lady love. But his love affairs, if passionate, were of short duration, and very soon there was amity in the camp once more.

PARRAMATTA ORCHARD NOTES.

During the past month only 6 points of rain fell in the orchard districts, and things are now beginning to look very dry on the surface. As regards the subsoil, however, there is plenty of moisture, but the citrus trees, which produce such an amount of surface feeders, would now be all the better for an inch of rain. Heavy rains are not wanted at this particular season of the year, while all the summer fruit trees are either blooming or setting their fruit. As the season advances the show of summer fruit continues to give splendid promise for a bountiful crop. Although some very sharp frosts have been experienced during the past week, no damage seems to have been done. The grape vines, which are breaking out well, have not even suffered, and the prospects of the vineyards are excellent. Most of the orchards and vineyards are getting into order, but there is yet a good deal of back work to do before the orchards and vineyards are properly cleaned up for the season. The dry month, however, has helped, from the fact that no delay has been caused by reason of wet days, and, consequently, wet ground. Citrus fruit is being marketed freely, and growers report having received very good prices for even inferior stuff. Some of the growers report that a good deal of pilfering has taken place of late at the railway stations, but whether the pilfering occurs at the local stations or at Darling Harbour, they do not know. One grower from Pennant Hills had three consignments pilfered within the course of a couple of weeks, and it was always the Choice Navel oranges that were broken into. It has caused the agents to be watchful, for instances have occurred that when a case of fruit has been opened up it has been found to be only half full. Agents now examine the cases before taking delivery, and they refuse to accept delivery of cases that have been tampered with, leaving them in the hands of the Railway Commissioners.

At last meeting of the Central Cumberland A. and H. Association, Mr. R. P. Banks exhibited an apple, which he had pulled on February 14 last, and staged at Castle Hill Show. The apple had since then been stowed away on a shelf, and still looked fresh and bright. He hopes to stage the same apple at the show to be held in February next year. The variety is known as "Springdale," a seedling raised by Mr. Albert Duffy, of Thornleigh. It is undoubtedly a very fine keeper.

THE WOOL TRADE.

OPENING OF THE SEASON.

A commencement was made in the disposal of the current season's wool clip in the Sydney market on Tuesday last, and continued on the two following days. If sufficient complete consignments had been forward the opening sale of the season would have been on Monday last, and the auctions extended over the three following days. Owing, however, to incomplete clips, the sales were confined to three days; and, instead of the re-arranged roster being adhered to next week, these sales are postponed, and no further catalogues will be submitted till September 22. It was originally expected that fully 20,000 bales could be offered in each of the first two weeks, but as only some 12,000 bales seemed available for next week there will be a break in the Sydney market till after the next Brisbane series.

When the sales opened on Tuesday last, it was quite evident, from the very full attendance of buyers, that there was no lack of interest in the opening of the season; and it was apparent, as the sales progressed, that, while there was but little activity on the part of some sections of buyers, others were very strong, and imparted a very healthy tone to the market. Continental representatives were keen, and, for attractive lines, rivalry was as strong as at any time during the heights of last season. Values eased in the case of fleece wool; and dusty wools of doubtful yield were neglected; but bulky pieces and locks sold up to previous rates; and crossbreds, the market generally ruling par to 2½ per cent. lower, compared to the rates in July last.

The selection of wools offered on the three days was a moderate one. Some of the clips opened out in good order, the quality being good and the staple well grown, but carrying more condition than last season. Dust, seed, and burr were not in excess of last year; others, however, were lacking in growth and carried a considerable quantity of dust on the backs, this particularly being the case with some of the western wools. The bulk of the offerings came from the west and north-west of this State, with one or two large and attractive lines from Queensland; including a number of exceptionally well-grown, bulky, robust warp wools. Odd clips were also forward from Riverina, showing a deep-grown, bulky, warp combing wool, with a dusty tip. Generally the Riverina wools appear a more bulky, a little heavier in condition, and more robust than last season, being sounder and better grown, although the staple in some cases is not so long as expected.

The indication of the sales was that, now that the war in the Balkans is over, Continental users will be a much stronger factor in the market than they were during the latter half of the last statistical year. It was impossible for such a war to be in progress, with possibility of an extension at any time, without affecting the textile industries on the Continent; particularly Germany and Austria. As an outcome of the war there was acute financial stringency and a slack demand at the last London sales on European accounts. These depressing influences are less pronounced, and will probably react beneficially on trade throughout Europe. Side by side with improvement, there is the practical passing of the Free Wool Bill in the United States Congress. A settling of the tariff in America must set free a lot of the tied-up business that has been waiting on the issue in the senate. It has been in parts of Europe and in the United States that trade has been bad, and in both instances the principal causes have been removed.

As against these signs of improvement there is the usual "bear" movement in Yorkshire, with the held-over wool in London from the last sales paraded as a menace to the actual strength of the position. Bradford is keen to keep up prices for spot delivery of tops, but is apparently prepared to anticipate lower prices for new year delivery. Last year there was no such move, fearing the reduced Australian clip would not admit of such a policy being pursued. This season Bradford topmakers appear to be more confident; possibly thinking that the clip for the current season will be a bumper one. In this they may be, in a measure, mistaken. The spirit of that they are disposed to act is shown in "Wool Records" of July 31 last, the writer saying:—"It may seem early in the season, and undoubtedly is, but we are in a position to announce on unquestionable authority that already selling forward for next December-January delivery has begun, at least 500 packs of 60's and 64's tops having been disposed of on a basis of 2s 2½d and 2s 3d. OPEN ALL DAY SATURDAY.
TOOHEY AND TOOHEY,
REAL ESTATE AND FINANCIAL AGENTS,

TOOHEY'S CORNER, 124 AVENUE-ROAD, MOSMAN, have for weeks past been engaged in addressing PERTINENT observations to OWNERS of Property NORTH OF THE HARBOUR, and have on divers occasions explained in these columns the nature of the business we operate, regarding the DISPOSAL and ACQUISITION OF REAL ESTATE.

TOOHEY AND TOOHEY have REPEATEDLY EXPLAINED in these columns the EXCEPTIONAL FACILITIES we POSSESS for ASSISTING PURCHASERS of Real Estate. We explain it again, as it is impossible to hear a "good thing" too often. Suppose, for example, a man sees a House or Cottage that suits his requirements, for, say, £2000. There is, we will assume, a Mortgage of £1200 on that House or Cottage. The intending Purchaser has £800 in Cash, which, added to the Mortgage, aggregates £2000. But the owner MUST HAVE ALL CASH. The intending Purchaser is therefore £800 short. In a case like this, we say ON THE SPOT—not A WEEK OR A MONTH AFTER, THAT WE WILL LEND HIM THE £800 SHORTAGE on the EASIEST OF EASY TERMS, and at the LOWEST RATE of interest prevailing for that class of advance; so far so good.

This ANOTHER CASE that will be applicable to the HUMBLER CLASS of Purchaser, AND WE CATER FOR ALL POCKETS. Suppose a man gets his "optics" on a Cottage which suits his requirements, and the price is £750. The owner in this case also REQUIRES ALL CASH. The Mortgage is £600, and the intending Purchaser has, say, £300 or £75 Cash. He would still be £50 or £75 short. WE SAY—AND WE SAY IT ON THE SPOT—NOT A YEAR AFTER—THAT WE WILL RENDER THAT MAN HELP. WE WILL ADVANCE him the £50 OR £75 required, at the LOWEST RATE OF INTEREST, and thereby render it possible FOR HIM TO SECURE A HOME. ASK YOURSELVES THE QUESTION:—WILL ANY OTHER AGENT DO THIS? If you find another agent who will do this, so expeditiously and so certain, just send TOOHEY AND TOOHEY his name and address, and we will have his photo. taken, and we will endeavour to see that he is placed in the front rank of his profession—a position well merited—as a reward for his progressive and helpful methods.

We make no secret of the fact that we are out for "Deeps!" for "Fame and Fortune," and, indeed, to put it in a nutshell, for the mighty dollar—and the man who is NOT, is no good to himself or his country. He lacks personal ambition. WE HAVE IT FULLY DEVELOPED.

TOOHEY AND TOOHEY specialise in RENT COLLECTING, and the GUARANTEE WE GIVE—AND OUR WORD IS OUR BOND—THAT EVERY OWNER WITHOUT EXCEPTION can rest assured that when other Agents are worrying him, he MAY RELY upon finding TOOHEY and TOOHEY'S CHEQUE awaiting the past month's rent collections BESIDE HIS BREAKFAST PLATE, ON THE FIRST—NOT THE SECOND DAY OF EACH MONTH. We guarantee this guarantee will operate "COUNT SOME," particularly when TOOHEY AND TOOHEY EMPHASISE the point that "OUR WORD IS OUR BOND."

It is a strange thing TOOHEY AND TOOHEY "SOME" to make you conversant with our methods, but we realise that advertising is the FIRST ESSENTIAL to success and TOOHEY AND TOOHEY DO NOT, and NEVER DID, allow the word "Failure" to have a place in our vocabulary. We allow the "Mug" the square peg in the round hole—and there are plenty of this sort of curiosity in our business—a monopoly of that word.

TOOHEY and TOOHEY recognise that the BEST and MOST SERVICEABLE ADVERTISING to be done is that performed by the PERSONAL INFLUENCE OF SATISFIED CLIENTS, and TOOHEY and TOOHEY are conducting our business HERE, as we have done for 25 YEARS IN MELBOURNE, with the FULL knowledge that SERVICE, AND A SQUARE DEAL TO ALL COUNTS, and it was the PERSONAL INFLUENCE actuated by FEELINGS OF GRATITUDE of our CLIENTS IN MELBOURNE, which ENABLED US to climb to the TOP, and now enables US TO MAINTAIN our ENVIABLE position there—RIGHT AT THE VERY TOP.

In entering the strongest hopes of our Melbourne experience repeating itself right here, and TOOHEY and TOOHEY have already BEEN FURNISHED with RELIABLE EVIDENCE that history will repeat itself.

ALL WE REQUIRE IS A FAIR FIELD AND NO FAVOUR.
AND WE WILL NOT ACCEPT LESS.

TOOHEY AND TOOHEY SAY, AND SAY IT EMPHATICALLY, THAT A FIRM'S STABILITY, EXPERIENCE, CAPACITY, AND PUNCTUAL METHODS

should "COUNT SOME" in the eyes of people who are obliged to have their "COIN" HANDLED BY OTHER MEN. We say, BEWARE OF THE ADVENTURER, and thereby profit by the experience of OTHERS. WE CANNOT REFER YOU to any better than the ROYAL BANK OF AUSTRALIA, LTD., PITT-STREET, Sydney. THEY KNOW US VERY WELL, AND THEY WILL BACK US, and Banks—as a rule—are conservative, and DO NOT BACK ADVENTURERS OR FOOLS.

If you require any more than this, it must be our Bank account you have your "Optics" on. If so, we say, instead of TOOHEY and TOOHEY consulting you, we ask that you will listen to the VOICE OF THE HONOURABLE W. H. EDGAR, MINISTER FOR PUBLIC WORKS AND HEALTH, in Victoria, who, by the way, is a highly cultured gentleman, and whose boast is that he occupies some of his time in "READING MEN," and the following is the conclusion, after 30 years' acquaintance, he has formed of our Senior Partner:—

Melbourne,
30th August, 1912.

I HAVE PLEASURE IN CERTIFYING THAT I HAVE KNOWN MR. WM. JAS. TOOHEY FOR THE PAST 10 YEARS. HE HAS BEEN VERY ACTIVE IN MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS, AND WAS A COUNCILLOR OF THE CITY OF FOOTSCRAY FOR 12 YEARS, FROM WHICH HE RETIRED VOLUNTARILY IN AUGUST, 1910. HE ALSO OCCUPIED THE MAYORAL CHAIR IN THAT CITY OF 27,000 SOULS, BEING ELECTED TO THAT HIGH AND RESPONSIBLE POSITION BY AN OVERWHELMING VOTE OF THE RATEPAYERS. HE HAS BEEN MOST SUCCESSFUL AS A REAL ESTATE AGENT, AND HAS DECIDED TO LEAVE THIS STATE, OWING TO THE POTENTIALITIES AND FASCINATIONS OF SYDNEY. I CAN WITH THE GREATEST CONFIDENCE RECOMMEND HIM TO ANYONE REQUIRING THE ADVICE AND DIRECTION OF A HIGHLY SKILLED AND RELIABLE BUSINESS MAN.

W. H. EDGAR,
MINISTER FOR PUBLIC WORKS AND HEALTH.

WE NOW HAVE A "GOOD STOCK" of Properties, and we append particulars of a FEW—ONLY A FEW as this paper WOULD NOT allow us SPACE to advertise particulars of all the Properties we have for Sale. INTENDING PURCHASERS bear in mind that WE HAVE A MOTOR SERVICE to enable you to inspect Properties, and SURELY THIS READING IS NOT so MENTALLY DEFICIENT not to realise the difference between an inspection by MOTOR, and an inspection by SHANKS' PONY.

TOOHEY and TOOHEY are progressive, and provide EVERY CONCEIVABLE FACILITY—EVEN SOME OF THE MONEY—to enable Prospective Purchasers to purchase property, and anxious owners to "Part"; and thus both should become HAPPY and CONTENTED in this THE FAIREST OF LANDS.

CAST YOUR "OPTICS" OVER THE PROPERTIES APPEARING HEREUNDER

and DO NOT ALL SPEAK AT ONCE, or become excited, as we NEVER get excited.

MOSMAN, THE HOME FOR THE RURAL MAGNATE.

The very pick of Sydney's Harbour frontage.—Palatial Residence, Brick on Stone, 2½ acres of land, 91 feet, which has been converted into a veritable garden of Eden. Art and nature have conspired to produce effects which must gratify the most fastidious. Lawns, Flowers, Shrubs, and Statuary present the most harmonious picture, making a combination only obtainable at enormous "first cost." The House in such a setting would be expected to be superb, and it fills all expectations. It faces the rising sun and the wide Pacific, and one only has to let the eye from this paradise to be cheered and comforted by the ever changing sea, from the harbour through the Heads to the open ocean. The internal economy of this "palace" is the last word in luxury and convenience. It is finished in perfect taste, and the walls are works of art. Nothing requires to be done to suit the most aesthetic taste. The accommodation is exhaustive, and is on a princely scale. Lounge, Dining, and Breakfast rooms, 7 Bedrooms, study, schoolroom, lounge, photographic room, sunroom, and elaborate offices. The largest room is 30ft x 20ft, the smallest 14ft x 14ft. Billiard-room 40ft x 24ft, with full-sized table in good order. The main hall and vestibule is 35ft x 9ft. Balcony 26ft x 14ft x 11ft, protected by verandahs. Large Bathroom, containing beautiful Rouse marble bath. Garage is solid brick, and out-houses and offices too numerous to particularise. Splash paths, and every conceivable facility for luxury and convenience. The property, as it stands, is placed at £14,000, and the owner has reconciled himself to realise and WILL SLAUGHTER at £7000. Terms may be arranged. £4000 may remain at 4½ per cent. for 3 or 5 years.

The purchaser may, at his option, purchase all furniture, motor car, etc, at a very low figure. To see this property is to purchase it. Motor to inspect.

MOSMAN FOR SEASCAPES.

Something Exceptionally Picturesque.—Fine STONE HOUSE of 8 rooms, all front windows and balcony command an uninterrupted and uninterruptible view of Middle Harbour and the open sea. A glance where any man may rest a balmy calm on days of perfect peace and enjoyment watching the rolling Pacific sweeping through the Heads, and the endless play of the water on the rocks. In rough weather this spectacle is magnificent. The House has all offices complete, and most conveniently adapted. It stands on a terrace, to facilitate drainage, and 27ft deep to back street. The front portion is secured up to the house, which stands some forty back from the road, and is 50ft wide by 16, thus being removed from the noise and dust of traffic. The grounds are laid out with natural flowering shrubs and trees, and the back portion for 130ft is quite level, and comprises fruit garden, fowlrun, and chicken-run. Such sites are very limited. Bargain at £1800. Title Freehold. Note.—We Finance purchasers.

HABERFIELD,
"Sydney's Garden Suburb."

POSSESSES EVERY RESIDENTIAL ADVANTAGE.

Picture to yourself a suburb which will embody every qualification that you demand in the ideal Home district. Then inspect HABERFIELD! You will find there every one of your demands fulfilled—and more. Modelled on the most successful "Garden City" enterprises of the world, HABERFIELD embodies all the approved, good features, and leaves out the undesirable.

Every man recognises the hundred advantages of owning his own home. You should realise in these days of high rentals that it is the landlord who reaps the profits—who benefits by your care of his house, and grounds, and by your improvement of his property for your own comfort. Why not be your OWN landlord? Our Easy Terms make it possible for every man to purchase his own Haberfield house, and, moreover, not to feel the strain of payment.

A small deposit of, say, £50, puts you in immediate possession. The balance of the purchase money is payable as rental. Cottages are available from £825 to £1375, and comparison of any price with the cottage offered thereat will emphasise strongly the building economy of the HABERFIELD SYSTEM OF CONSTRUCTION. You can buy outright, or under the extraordinary liberal provisions above referred to. The Cottages are ready for immediate purchase, or we will design and build to order, embodying every feature required by the purchaser, within the scope of the purchase money.

There are many potent reasons why you should act immediately to secure a home of your own. Sydney Suburban Property, especially that convenient to the city, is steadily and surely increasing in value. Haberfield bids fair as a grand investment. Their values must materially increase.

The design of "Sydney's Garden Suburb" always aimed at realising fully this title. The wide, tree-lined streets; the large, open, parklike spaces; the fine grounds, and the gardens surrounding the handsome homes, give a true sense of living under the most healthful, pleasant conditions.

Haberfield is conveniently situated, being but 20 minutes from the heart of the metropolis. Take Abbotsford or Haberfield tram in George-street, and alight at O'Connor-street. By "through" train to Summer Hill the journey is 10 minutes.

PHILIPS' PRESSED STEEL PULLEYS

are a combination of Strength and Grace, ensuring to the user entire satisfaction.

THAT NOTICEABLE FEATURE,

they always run true—is secured by the careful methods of boring their centres, so that perfect concentricity may be obtained.

WOBBLY PULLEYS are an abomination, and are the results of inaccuracies in boring the centres, and lack of care in the construction of the bushings.

THEIR WEIGHT

is just about half that of a cast-iron pulley, and being split can be taken down or mounted with only a few moments' work, without disturbing other equipment.

Allow us to demonstrate as a power and money-saving proposition the adaptability of installing

COLD STORAGE INSULATION.
The matter of insulation is all important, and very careful consideration should be given it before deciding on what material you intend using.
"NONPAREIL" CORK INSULATION now occupies pride of place among insulating materials, and since introduction by us, about 3 years ago, we have sold close on one million feet, plainly showing that the advantages of this material have been proved. The points of superiority of
"NONPAREIL" CORK BOARDS are
High Efficiency—4 inches of "Nonpareil" Cork is equal to 10 inches of charcoal—a very important factor in the saving of space.
VERMIN PROOF, WHITE ANT PROOF, ease and quickness in fixing, non absorbent, does not sag.
"NONPAREIL" CORK BOARDS ARE ALL CORK, NOTHING ELSE.
The Superiority of

HIGH COURT JUDGMENTS.

INDUSTRIAL SUBJECTS.

ECHO OF BRISBANE STRIKE.

UNION APPEAL DISMISSED.

The High Court delivered a number of reserved judgments yesterday.

Judgment was delivered in the appeal by the Amalgamated Society of Engineers (Queensland) v Smith, in which the society set up the illegality of its own rules as a defence to the action. Respondent, John Smith, was a member of the society, and employed as chief engineer of the Brisbane Tramway Company. He was, by resolution of the Brisbane district committee, excluded from the society on the ground that he had acted contrary to its interests by disobeying an order to cease work during the Brisbane tramway strike. He brought an action against the society, and the trustees of the Brisbane branch, claiming a declaration that the resolution was ultra vires and void, and an injunction restraining the defendant from enforcing it, and also claiming to be restored to membership. The defences filed were:—(1) That the resolution of exclusion was not ultra vires, but was properly authorised by the rules, and properly passed and enforced; that the contract of membership contributed by the society's rules was unlawful at common law as being in restraint of trade, and, therefore, incapable of being enforced, and that under such circumstances the Court was prevented by the Queensland Trades Union Act of 1886 from entertaining the action, because it was an attempt to enforce an agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union to provide benefits to members, and that the contract of membership was an illegal one and incapable of enforcement, apart from any question of restraint of trade. The action was tried by Mr. Justice Chubb, and dismissed with costs. On appeal the Full Court of the State reversed his Honor's judgment, and declared the resolution complained of ultra vires and void, and that the plaintiff was, when excluded, and still was, a member of the society, and it granted the the injunction sought. Defendants, therefore, appealed to the High Court from that judgment.

Mr. Justice Barton was of opinion that the appeal failed. If there was nothing in the rule that warranted the expulsion of the plaintiff he was, upon that broad ground, entitled to succeed, subject to his meeting the other defences, even if the course taken against him was in respect of mere procedure otherwise regular. It was admitted that he was ordered to break his contract of service with his employer, and was expelled for refusing to comply with the order. It was an order to do something contrary to law. It was said that his conduct in disobeying it could properly be described as "acting contrary to the society's interests." The order was issued to all the society's members employed by the company, and to obey it in conjunction with them would have been to strike. A strike was not always unlawful at common law, but as regarded the plaintiff singly, as it wasnot lawful to obey his Honor doubted whether the society could be heard to say that the refusal to do so was contrary to its interests. The plaintiff said that he was expelled in breach of his contract with the society; that contract was contained in the printed rules. Council showed the Court that there was no rule expressly warranting his exclusion in the admitted circumstances. The defendants endeavoured to show that authority for the expulsion was to be implied from certain rules which they called in aid. In that attempt they had failed. Under the rules there could be no expulsion without a cause expressed in the rules. The plaintiff, therefore, had been unlawfully expelled. In respect to the question arising under the Trades Union Act upon the nature of the relief sought, he thought the case was clearly within Osborne's, which was decided by a very strong Bench. His conclusion was sufficient to dispose of the second defence. On the question of unreasonable restraint of trade in relation to the society's rules, his Honor remarked that it was not enough to point to a rule, or to more rules than one, operating in restraint of trade, unless it was seen that the objects of the society were in restraint of trade. On the other hand, that might be shown by the substance of objectionable rules, for it might be such as to be inconsistent with the action that the rule object of the society was not in restraint of trade. It seemed probabel in respect to each rule cited on this branch of the case, either that the rule was susceptible to a reasonable interpretation which relieved it of the stigma of illegality in that respect, or that the restraint of trade was merely incidental, and did not go to the main objects of the society. The third defence set up was that, apart from any question of restraint of trade, the contract of membership was illegal as containing authority to the society and its officers to compel illegal or quasi criminal acts, and, therefore, that it was not enforcible even to the extent of the establishment of a claim to membership. This defence might be characterised as bold, seeing that it virtually asserted the existence of a conspiracy embracing all who thoroughly assented to be bound by such rules. It was the more extraordinary since, if it were sustained, the society would forfeit its registration under the Trade Union Act, 1886. It was urged that an order to strike or to leave employment involved an attempt to compel an offence against the law. But the defendants failed to establish that obedience to any of the society's rules involved the commission of an illegality, since each rule cited for the purpose is capable of observance without breach of either the Trades Union Act or the Commonwealth Conciliation and Arbitration Act. The third defence failed as well as the first and second.

In the course of a separate judgment, which comprised an exhaustive review of the case, Mr. Justice Isaacs arrived at the same conclusions as the Acting Chief Justice. Whilst prepared to give a broad meaning to the words of the rules quoted under which expulsion was ordered, his Honor insisted that however general any words of power might be, they must be at all events controlled by the scope of the objects and purposes created by the constitution of the society. He could not agree with the contention that rule 37 contemplated strikes with reference to other trades. He was therefore distinctly of opinion that the orders of January 19 and May 20 were neither of them resolutions of the classes included in the rules of the society. In giving effect to the final contention of the illegality of the society, his Honor said the Court did not give effect to it for the sake of the defendant, but for the sake of the law. His Honor could not agree with the final contention, and agreed for separate reasons given that the appeal should be dismissed.

Mr. Justice Duffy read a brief judgment on behalf of himself and Mr. Justice Rich, in which they agreed with the reasons and judgment given by Mr. Justice Isaacs.

Mr. Justice Powers, in a separate judgment, agreed with the Acting Chief Justice.

The appeal was therefore dismissed unanimously, with costs.

INDUSTRIAL AGREEMENTS.

MUST BE UNDER THE ACT.

Reserved judgment was delivered upon the special case stated by the President of the Commonwealth Arbitration Court in reference to the proceedings in that Court between the Federated Engine Drivers and Firemen's Association and the Northern and Southern Colliery Proprietors of New South Wales and others. The claimant association originally filed its plaint on October 15, 1910, but, owing to a special decision of the High Court, due to the passage of the Commonwealth Conciliation and Arbitration Amendment Act, 1911, the plaint did not come into valid existence until November 24, 1911. Between these dates agreements were made between the claimant organisation and a number of the respondent parties (including the northern and southern colliery proprietors). When the hearing of the Arbitration Court case was recommenced on May 12, 1913, these parties objected to the jurisdiction of the Court, claiming that the dispute had been settled by the agreements, and applied to be struck out of the proceedings. The President then asked the High Court to decide:—(1) Whether the parties mentioned should be struck out at that stage; (2) was it the duty of the Arbitration Court to proceed with the inquiry under the plaint; (3) are the protested agreements "industrial agreements," within the meaning of part 6 of the Conciliation and Arbitration Act; (4) if so, are the provisions of part 6 valid and enforceable under the Constitution?

During the course of a lengthy judgment the Acting Chief Justice reviewed the previous cases known as the Jumbunna case and the Musicians' case. He held still to the opinion that section 73 was the governing section of the Act, and that the remaining sections of part 6 were ancillary to it. He was, therefore, of opinion that the agreements were not industrial agreements within the meaning of part 6 of the Act. Question 4, therefore, did not arise. Question 1 he would answer in the negative, and question 2 in the affirmative.

Mr. Justice Isaacs delivered the judgment of Mr. Justice Duffy, Mr. Justice Rich, and himself. Question 1 was answered "No"; question 2, "Yes"; question 3, "No"; question 4 did not require to be answered.

In a separate judgment, Mr. Justice Higgins agreed with his brother Judges. He held, however, that all agreements under the Act must precede and provide for the process of conciliation and arbitration. "No proceedings, no meetings of parties (with or without mediators), which end in an agreement for wages and conditions, can be treated as a process of conciliation and arbitration provided for by the agreement. An agreement providing for submission of a dispute to arbitration involves, expressly or by implication, a promise to abide by the award made. The penalties are for breach of the agreement by disobeying the award."

Mr. Justice Powers, in a separate judgment, agreed.

The order of the Court was therefore that the questions be answered as follows:—1, no; 2, yes; 3 no; 4, not answered. The case was remitted to the President with that opinion.

INJUNCTION REFUSED.

EFFECT ON PREVIOUS DECISIONS.

Reserved judgment was delivered in another case arising out of the same particulars. The Australian Agricultural Company, and 12 other respondents, including the Northern and Southern colliery proprietors of New South Wales, applied to the High Court for an injunction to restrain the President of the Arbitration Court from further proceeding with the case in that court (plaint No. 6, 1910) in view of the existence and currency of the agreements dealt with in the previous special case stated by the President.

The Acting Chief Justice said it was apparent to him that the parties confused an industrial agreement with an agreement under section 24 of the Act. They appeared to think that the agreements would operate as industrial agreements, and that they would also operate under section 24. The agreements, as just decided in the special case, fall in both aspects. Consequently they were without the sanctions and attributes which they would have possessed had they conformed to the terms of the statute. There were many other questions in the case, but his Honor could not avoid the conclusion that the substance of the matter lay in the question whether the agreements representedactually and fully the intended agreements between the parties. It appeared clear to his Honor that they did not. The parties were aiming at the production of an instrument which would have certain statutory effects and give them certain statutory remedies in case of breach, and they looked no further than that. They had failed to compose an agreement with these attributes. His Honor thought the parties never in their minds assented to and executed these particular agreements for the sake of, or in contemplation of any effectiveness they might possibly possess at common law. They had no thought of common law obligations. They were thinking only how they might secure the statutory advantages and remedies. The parties could not be placed in the position they would have secured if the mistake had not taken place. His Honor did not think or suggest that the decision in the Musicians' case was in any way impugned by the above conclusions. Neither did he think that the question of a negative covenant, so much discussed at the Bar, arose in the case. He was therefore of opinion that the motion for injunction must be dismissed, with costs.

In a separate judgment, in which he dealt exhaustively with the big issues, as to the presence and validity of a negative covenant, and as to the necessity or expediency of the High Court reviewing its previous decisions, Mr. Justice Isaacs concurred in the opinion that the motion should be dismissed. "The oath of a Justice of this Court," declared his Honor, "is to do right to all manner of people, according to law. Our sworn loyalty is to the law itself, and to the organic law of the Constitution first of all. If, then, we find the law to be plainly in conflict with what we or any of our predecessors erroneously thought it to be, we have no right to choose between giving effect to the law, and maintaining an incorrect interpretation. It is not, in my opinion, better that the Court should be persistently wrong than that it should be ultimately right." His Honor said he had in the musicians' case stated that the stipulation here relied on by the plaintiffs was contrary to public policy.

Mr. Justice Higgins, in concurring with Mr. Justice Isaacs, said he thought the Court was not only entitled, but was in duty bound to overrule the J. C. Williamson v Musicians' Union case.

Mr. Justice Duffy read the judgment of himself and Mr. Justice Rich. Their Honors agreed with the decision that the injunction motion should be dismissed. Dealing with the question of the effect of the decision upon previous judgments, their Honors concurred in the opinion that the decision in the Musicians' case was necessarily involved.

Mr. Justice Powers, in a separate judgment, concurred with the dismissal of the motion. His Honor did not agree that the decision involved that in the musicians' case, and said he was opposed to the Court reviewing that or any other previous decision without all the parties concerned being heard on the matter.

The motion for injunction was dismissed, with costs.

LEAVE TO AMEND PLEADINGS.

Judgment was delivered in an appeal in which the State Sheriff (Mr. Maybury) and another contested a judgment of the State Full Court, finding against him on a demurrer to his plea to a statement of claim made by George Plowman, in an action by the latter, claiming £1000 for alleged trespass and false imprisonment. Mr. Broomfield (instructed by Messrs. J. R. Baxter, Bruce, and Co.) appeared for the appellant; and Mr. Alroy Cohen (instructed by Mr. H. C. G. Moss) for the respondent. The appeal was allowed. Mr. Broomfield, undertaking on behalf of the defendants, on the suggestion of the Court, either to amend his plea substantially or to amend formally in such manner as to allow the plaintiff to raise any sufficient ground of demurrer, apart from that now decided, the defendants not to be subject to any costs of amendment. The order of the Full Court was discharged, and the demurrer overruled.

(Before Sir Edmund Barton, Acting Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Isaacs, and Mrs. Justice Duffy.)

ART IN AUSTRALIA.

When Mr. Holman in his speech to the Parliamentary delegation spoke of Australians as like the ancient Britons isolated from the whole world, he touched on one of the conditions of life here which are but with especial severity by artists and people interested in their work. The Australians who repeats one of the formulae of the returned traveller usually does so with sincerity, but with a mental reservation. However readily he acknowledges the blessings of his lot he cannot ignore its disadvantages unless he is a man of abnormally narrow interests. The first of them is the loss of contact with the best that is thought and done in the modern world. It is no consolation to be told that many Londoners appreciate what is going on about them as little as if they were living in a town in the backblocks, or that the Londoner is in danger of listening only to the song that rings newest in his ears. The second is the absence of a standard of perfection among both workers and critics. Although the attitude of Englishmen towards art is one of the stock subjects for jest among themselves, yet there are among them any number of men who will not be satisfied with "second best, and are able to detect and punish hurried or slovenly work. The third disadvantage is the loss of artistic sympathy. However small it may be relatively to the total population, the artist will find in England a section of the people ready, not only to appreciate work of a recognised standard of excellence, but to welcome experiments and to reward every effort that is sincere and disinterested.

The first two of these disadvantages are felt, no doubt, in every department of life. In politics, in commerce, or in any other kind of activity, two of the essentials of good work are knowledge of modern progress and the consciousness of a high standard of criticism. But all three are felt with especial severity by artists, and all may be summed up as lack of appreciation. If an artist were entitled, after passing an examination or serving an apprenticeship, to receive a living wage from the State for the rest of his life, quite possibly the sympathy of his fellow-workmen would, or ought to, be enough for him. But since an artist must live, either by his pictures or his pupils, the appreciation of the public is from one point of view quite as important. It is to excuse the conspicuous lack of such appreciation in Australia that we most often hear of the youth of our country. We are told that men are too busy exploring deserts, making roads, or growing sheep to have time to spare for the unpractical and unremunerative arts. But the excuse of want of time may always be answered by the example of the busy man who has time for everything. Obviously what is lacking is knowledge and a just appreciation of what is worth having. It is not true that people of wealth have no desire for pictures on their walls. They will fill their rooms with cheap engravings or worthless coloured prints. It is equally untrue that people of wealth will not spend their money on any but so-called utilitarian objects. They will spend any amount of money on dinners for their friends or on frocks for their wives. The difficulty for artists is to inculcate the view that a picture, a thing of beauty which may last for all time, is worth more, and is more desirable than any dress or any dinner. At present there can be no doubt that they are far from having succeeded in doing so. Many people who set out to buy in a spirit of patronage or of pitiwill withdraw in amazement when they are asked a price that will recompense the artist for his training and his work. In this failure the fault of the painters, either as artists or as merchants of their wares? No one who has watched the development of Australian painting can attribute it to a lack of merit. Men recognised as competent have too often declared Australian artists worthy of the highest honours, in Paris Mr. Fox and Mr. Bunny have gained distinctions attained by few artists and envied by all. In London Mr. Lambert seems likely to succeed to the place among portrait painters left vacant by Mr. Sargent. If these were the only distinguished Australians it might be said that their success was the result of a European training. The award of the bronze medal of the Paris Salon to Mr. Carter, however, is a conclusive proof of what may be done in a peculiarly difficult branch of his art by an Australian working at home, and the conclusion is fortified by the galleries of Sydney, Melbourne, and Adelaide. However great Mr. Streeton's success in England, he is never likely to do anything stronger or finer than the "Cremorne Pastoral," or "Still Glides the Stream," or "Fires On." Mr. Streeton, indeed, will always be an example of the loss a landscape painter suffers when he deserts his country. For a long time he must be under the same handicaps as an author who writes in a language not his own.

Just as we feel something wanting in the vivid and cunningly-balanced prose of Mr. Conrad, so we feel a loss of strength in the artist working under alien skies. Is it then the fault of the artists as business men that the public fail to appreciate their work in the most practical way? No doubt artists as a body have a good deal in common with the Oxford scholars described in Mr. Rhodes's will. It is too much to expect of them that they should do their own work well and be commercial travellers at the same time, and it is too much to hope that Parliament will ever establish as the French have done a Ministry of Fine Arts capable of doing their business for them. But if we are to keep our artists and so enable them to do the best they are capable of, every effort should be made to realise the project of a Federal exhibition of the picked work of Australia to be held at intervals in Melbourne and Sydney. The Royal Art Society and the Society of Artists each year have the gratitude of the whole community. They have quite recently introduced us to new men of the calibre of Mr. Hilder, Mr. Griffiths, Mr. Meldrum, and Mr. Gruner and others, and they induce men from other States, such as Mr. Heysen, to send characteristically Australian pictures from time to time. The Fine Arts Society, by providing a permanent exhibition of first-class work, fills what ought to be, if it is not, a long-felt want. But the annual shows have not yet done what is most wanted in this country. They have not disabused the public of the belief that cheap pictures are to be sought above all others like bargains at drapers' sales. At present the chief obstacle of the artist is the idea that any picture is as good as any other, and his chief enemy is the artist who knows nothing of the value of training and therefore does not feel the absence of it. Inspiration is needed in Australian art even more than education, although the would-be purchaser has no right to complain that pictures are painted here as technical experiments. But we believe that a Federal exhibition of pictures selected by trusted artists would be of great value in the education of the public. It would supply a touchstone of excellence which in the insensible training of the spectator is as valuable to the eye as it is to the mind in the training of a critic of literature.

THE BALKANS.

TURCO-BULGARIAN PARLEY

NEW FRONTIERS.

ALMOST AGREED UPON.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 5.

Talaat Bey, Halil Bey, and General Mahmud Pasha are the negotiators on behalf of Turkey in connection with the Adrianople question.

The first two named are confirmed partisans on the side of a good understanding with Bulgaria.

The British, Austrian, and Russian Embassies have been instructed to support the Bulgarian delegates.

LONDON, Sept. 5.

Reuter's Constantinople correspondent states that the new frontiers have been virtually agreed upon already. They give Turkey sufficient ground to enable her to defend Adrianople, with no restriction of the right to fortify the frontier.

Turkey has agreed to an important rectification of the frontier between the north of Adrianople and the Black Sea.

THE ARMY FACTOR.

LONDON, Sept. 5.

Mr. Ashmead Bartlett, the correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph," had an interview with Enver Bey, the Turkish Commander-in-Chief, in Thrace, in which the latter declared that eight army corps, numbering 300,000 men, were now in Thrace, and if there was any attempt made to surrender Adrianople, or, in fact, any part of Thrace, the army would take the necessary steps to prevent it. The men, he added, were clamouring to be led against the Bulgarians or allowed to return to their homes.

AUSTRALIAN WARSHIPS.

SOUTH AFRICAN VISIT.

A TRIP TO MARITZBURG.

PIETERMARITZBURG, Sept. 4.

Admiral Patey and nearly 300 officers and men of the Australia arrived from Durban to-day, and were accorded a warm-hearted reception at the railway station.

The officers, after a motor trip to places of interest, were entertained at a civic luncheon, which was a most successful function. The Mayor presided over a representative gathering. The healths of Admiral Patey, the Deputy-Administrator (Mr. Plowman), Captain Radcliffe, and the Mayor were toasted.

Tributes were paid to the material progress of Australia.

Admiral Patey briefly reiterated the views he had already expressed with regard to the navy defence of the Empire. What was right for one Dominion, he declared, might not be right for another. Varying circumstances made it difficult to lay down a single plan for all parts.

During the afternoon all the men marched to the park, where, after a substantial luncheon, they participated in a programme of sports, being favoured with a fine afternoon.

A party of officers visited the Ladysmith battlefields during the day.

The Australia is coaling to-day. She is taking in 700 tons of Natal coal, this being the first occasion in which the local product has ever been supplied to a Dreadnought.

ATTEMPT TO WRECK EXPRESS.

LONDON, Sept. 5.

The police are investigating an attempt to wreck the "Flying Scotchman" express at Prestonpans on Tuesday, by means of a large stone placed on the line.

Fortunately the cowcatcher thrust the obstacle aside.

AISGILL DISASTER.

THE INQUIRIES.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

LABOUR LEADER'S ALLEGATIONS.

LONDON, Sept. 4.

Mr. J. H. Thomas, M.P., general secretary of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, has been granted permission to attend the inquiry into the Aisgill railway disaster if he consents to remain silent.

Mr. C. Paget, Superintendent of the Midland Railway Company, has intimated that he does not intend to allow the cross-examination of witnesses as was the case at the inquiry into the disaster at Hawes Junction, in 1910.

The railwaymen implicated did not desire Mr. Thomas to represent them.

Mr. Thomas has protested against the men ignoring the union leaders.

In the course of a newspaper interview, Mr. Thomas said that the disaster at Aisgill had been due to shortness of steam on both trains through the use of inferior coal. The public, he said, would insist upon knowing why any cross-examination of the witnesses would not be allowed in a case where the loss of 14 lives was involved.

Mr. Paget protests, in reply, that an attempt is being made to prejudice the inquiry into the cause of the disaster.

BOARD OF TRADE INQUIRY.

An inquiry by the Board of Trade is proceeding in private.

Several newspapers protest against the inquiry not being public.

DIFFICULTIES OF IDENTIFICATION.

The difficulties in the way of identifying the remains found in the burnt coaches led to much confusion. A London girl named Lindsay was reported dead. She did not travel in the train, however, but her father and sister were injured, and the former is now in a critical condition.

It is believed Sir Arthur Douglas's valet perished.

ROYAL SYMPATHY.

The King and Queen have sent a message of sympathy to the relatives of those who were killed.

THE KNOCK-OUT BLOW.

PROTEST BY CORONER'S JURY.

LONDON, Sept. 4.

At the inquest regarding the death of Harry Price, of South Africa, after being "knocked out" in a boxing contest with Private Basham, the jury returned a verdict of death from misadventure.

The jury added a rider protesting against the practice of counting a knock-out blow as a win.

Basham was discharged.

AERONAUTICS.

DOUBLE FLYING FATALITY.

BERLIN, Sept. 4.

Lieutenant Eckenbrecker and Lieutenant Prinz were monoplaning at Breig to-day, when the machine capsized at a height of 300 feet, and both airmen were killed.

BRITISH ARMY MANOEUVRES.

LONDON, Sept. 4.

Between 30 and 40 aeroplanes and three airships will be engaged in the army manoeuvres in the Midlands next week.

JAPAN AND CHINA.

A NANKING INCIDENT.

TOKIO, Sept. 5.

Considerable indignation is being expressed owing to the fact that, during the looting by the rebels in Nanking, two Japanese, carrying flags of their own nation, were killed.

Some Chauvinist politicians demand that Japanese troops should occupy Tientsin because of the incident.

JOHNSON INJURED.

RESULT OF MOTOR COLLISION.

LONDON, Sept. 4.

A taxi-cab driver named Starling was charged at the Westminster Police Court to-day with reckless driving and colliding with the motor car of Jack Johnson, the boxer.

Johnson was badly injured in the back, and will not be able to appear in public. His wife escaped.

Johnson, who had been performing at a music-hall in Gravesend, has had to cancel his engagement.

PETROL SUBSTITUTES.

IMPORTANT TESTS.

LONDON, Sept. 5.

It was decided to demand that the Government should cease to give contracts to firms where the wages of women were below £1 per week.

Delegates loudly applauded references made by the German and French delegates to "the growing influence of the workman against war."

All the chief railway centres sent resolutions, the executive of the National Union of Railway Employees urging that they should terminate the system of conciliation boards.

A GIANT SCULLER.

PADDON IN SYDNEY.

TRAINING TO ROW ARNST.

James Paddon, the Evans Head (Richmond River) sculler, arrived in Sydney yesterday, in company with P. Hannan, of New Zealand. The Australian champion will commence serious training on Monday on the Parramatta River, from Baley's shed, for his match against Richard Arnst, on November 1. Mr. H. Floyd will act as coach, and C. Towns as pacemaker.

In discussing the proposed match against Ernest Barry, for the world's championship, Paddon said that it was not likely that his backers would take any further steps until after the forthcoming Australian championship match had been decided.

"As a matter of fact," said Paddon, "I personally would not feel inclined to go to England to row against Barry, unless I had beaten Arnst or the best of the other Australians. In any case, I am in the hands of my backers."

Paddon is a giant in stature; he stands 6ft 2½in, and weight 14st 4lb at present. He has a chest measurement of 42 inches, with an expansion of 7½in. He has a spread—that is arms extended from the shoulders—of 6ft 5½in. He is 27 years of age, and expects to weigh 13st 10lb on the day of his race against Arnst.

Hannan is desirous of arranging matches against some of the lesser lights.

PRICE OF GAS.

REGULATION IN VICTORIA.

MELBOURNE, Friday.

The State Cabinet has agreed to the main outlines of a bill to be introduced this year to provide for the future control of the gas supply of Melbourne.

It is proposed to limit the dividend payable by the Metropolitan Gas Company to 10 per cent. per annum on the capital paid up, and to fix a standard price of 4s per 1000 cubic feet for the sale of gas to the public. There will be a provision, however, that the company may increase or decrease the price above or below this standard, subject to a reduction or increase in the rate of dividends payable by the company. Thus the dividends will have to be reduced below the standard of 10 per cent. by 5s per £100 of capital for every penny or fraction of a penny that the price has been raised above the 4s standard during any half year. Similarly if the company cuts down its price, for every penny of reduction in any half year it will be allowable for the company to raise its dividend by 5s per £100 of capital above the standard 10 per cent.

EXPENSES.

MINISTERS' ALLOWANCES CONDEMNED.

STRONG TALK BY LIBERAL MEMBERS.

MELBOURNE, Friday.

During the early part of the no-confidence motion debate in the House of Representatives reference was made by Mr. Tudor to a statement made by Mr. Palmer, a Ministerial member, during his campaign. He read an affidavit to the effect that Mr. Palmer had said that Mr. Fisher and several of his Ministers had been guilty of offences for which they should be in gaol. Last night Mr. McDonald dared Mr. Palmer to bring the matter up in the House and prove his statements.

This morning Mr. Palmer was granted leave to deal with the matter. He pointed out that during the closing hours of the session before last, Mr. Fisher announced that the Government was of opinion that when Ministers were travelling on purely public business they should receive travelling allowances. The Prime Minister was to receive 40s a day and the other Ministers 25s a day. Persons who took money out of the till of their employers without the knowledge of their employers were sent to gaol. The ex-Prime Minister and his colleagues had done worse than that. They had drawn expenses while away on political party business, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Fisher had definitely stated that Ministers would not draw money while they were on party business. The return prepared on the matter showed that within five months of Mr. Fisher making the virtuous statement he drew expenses while he was in the State of Queensland fighting the battle of his party on the hustings.

Mr. Mathews: Was Mr. Fisher not on public business?

Mr. Palmer: Mr. Fisher said he would not draw the money, except when he was away solely on public business. The vice-president of the Executive Council, Senator McGregor, drew travelling expenses for all the time he was away with Mr. Fisher. Mr. Frazer while P.M.G. drew travelling allowances while he was in Tasmania doing election work on behalf of his party. The men in a high place in the Government of the country who used their power to put their hands in the public treasury to enrich themselves were guilty of a worse offence than the man who put his hand in his master's till.

Mr. Tudor said it had been claimed that the present Ministry was not drawing any allowance. Perhaps they had other funds on which they could draw.

The Treasurer: I think that remark should be withdrawn.

Mr. Tudor: I have said nothing that should be withdrawn.

The Attorney-General: You have imputed corruption to us.

Mr. Tudor: If honorary members have any objection to my remark I will withdraw it. The ex-Prime Minister had done nothing he should be ashamed of. He had stated that while he was in his own electorate he did not draw a penny for expenses. Mr. Fisher drew expenses while he was in Brisbane, when he was on public business. He spoke only on one night while he was in Brisbane.

Mr. Frazer, when he was in Hobart, was in the Government office every day, and he did departmental work. He spoke on one day for his party, and for that day he drew no expenses. If it was found that he had he would walk out of public life.

Mr. Higgs asked the Treasurer if the Ministers of the present Government have drawn any travelling expenses.

The Treasurer: No allowances have been drawn by Ministers of State, nor do they propose to draw any.

HIGH COURT INCIDENT.

OVERRULING A PREVIOUS JUDGMENT.

MR. JUSTICE BARTON EXPLAINS.

An unusual incident occurred in the High Court yesterday at the conclusion of the reading of judgments in the engine-drivers and firemen's case.

During the argument of the cases more than two days had been occupied upon an aspect of the case which affected previous decisions given by the High Court, particularly the decision in the musicians' case, given by the Chief Justice (Sir Samuel Griffith) and Mr. Justice Barton (Mr. Justice Isaacs dissenting). A majority of the Judges yesterday dealt at length with the bearing of their judgments in the engine-drivers and firemen's case on the decision given in the musicians' case.

The Acting Chief Justice said: It may perhaps occasion some surprise that in my judgment I did not deal with the policy of expediency of reversing previous decisions of this Court. I make no criticism on what other members of the Bench have done. I only state, in my own defence, that until five or ten minutes before we met in court this morning I did not know that the subject would be entered upon in the way it has been. I do not in any way impeach the right of my learned brethren to express their views on the propriety or accuracy of former decisions. Had I more fully apprehended what my learned brethren had in view, I might have devoted myself to an examination of the question which they have treated, but as to criticising the conduct of my learned brethren, I do not attempt to do so.

At this stage there was a consultation between Mr. Justices Isaacs, Duffy, and Rich, and after Mr. Justice Isaacs had spoken to Sir Edmund Barton, the Acting Chief Justice said the Court desired to adjourn for a few minutes. Their Honors were absent about 20 minutes, and upon returning into court,

Sir Edmund Barton said: My colleagues, or some of them, appear to think that unless I say something more a false impression may be created by what I have already said on the case recently under consideration. I should be extremely sorry if an impression could exist that I intended to convey the slightest imputation upon any of my colleagues. I do not myself think that my words were fairly open to any such interpretation. But if there is anyone who thinks they were, then I consider it my duty to myself to remove it. Of course it is open to every Judge, in considering a judgment upon a case reserved, to view the case in all its aspects. It is open to him to state such grounds as he thinks proper. There is no judicial freedom without that. Of course, if he thinks it necessary to criticise a former decision of the Court, it is open to him to do so. Such things occur in the Courts of England every day. If I have the concurrence of my colleagues, I will say that the musicians' case was mentioned between us in what I said to-day, I was not conveying that I was taken by surprise that references were made to that case, or that opinions were expressed disagreeing with the decision in that case. What was in my mind was that as we had not taken the course which was taken, for instance, in the prohibition case the other day, on an understanding that the previous decisions of the Court were not to be brought up for review and reconsidered ultimately, it did not present itself to my mind that there was to be an overruling of the musicians' case, and what was more likely to give rise to that impression was that I did not know that there was a majority of the Court who disagreed with the musicians' decision.

Mr. Justice Isaacs said: I am very glad my learned Brother Barton has added to what he originally said. No one, of course, can question the right of every Judge to deliver such a judgment as he thinks right in the circumstances, and on any ground he thinks right. The matter that troubled me and others in connection with this question was the possibility of a false impression being created as to whether the members of the Court who have decided against a former decision in the musicians' case, and had done so without intimating their intention to consider the case in which judgment was delivered this morning in all its bearings. I am glad my learned brother has made it plain that he was aware it was the intention of the Justices of this Court to consider the musicians' case in all its bearings, and, of course, I need hardly say, having imparted that information, it would appear to my mind to carry with it the necessary imputation that, considering a case already decided, that is, considering its validity and accuracy, it connotes the possibility of overruling it. I am quite sure that my learned brother had no intention whatever—he would be incapable of it—of reflecting upon the candour of his brother Judges. All I wanted to make clear was that I was, indicated that reconsideration would be given to the musicians' case, and that the decision given by those who did decide in that way was one of a most carefully considered nature.

Mr. Justice Powers: It distinctly understood that the whole matter was open for every Judge to express an opinion on the musicians' case or any other case.

Mr. Justice Rich: I, too, was under the impression that the musicians' case should be considered in all its bearings.

Mr. Justice Barton: All I need add is, as I said this morning, that if I had thought the overruling of the musicians' case was imminent I should have expressed my opinion on it.

STEAMER AEON.

TO BE TEMPORARILY REPAIRED

The steamer Aeon, belonging to the Australian Steamships, Ltd., which put into Sydney in a leaking condition, while on a voyage from Newcastle to Geelong on Thursday, was removed to Neutral Bay yesterday morning, where a further examination of the damage done by the bump sustained when leaving Newcastle was made by a diver.

The inspection showed that a few rivets had started. The vessel was still taking in water, but this was being kept well in hand by the vessel's pumps. The work of discharging portion of the cargo in No. 1 hold proceeded yesterday, and it is hoped that, when this is got out, it will be possible to effect temporary repairs without sending the steamer to dock. The cargo will be removed by Monday night, and, after the necessary temporary repairs are effected, the vessel will leave for Melbourne, where she will go into dock to have the damage thoroughly repaired.

Being a new vessel, the Aeon is equipped with the most up-to-date pumps, and these would keep in check any inflow which might possibly develop on the run to Melbourne.

A BIG CARGO.

BALLINA, Friday.

CHINN CASE.

CONDUCT OF THE INQUIRY.

UNRECORDED PROTESTS.

MELBOURNE, Friday.

Mr. Starke continued his examination of Henry Chinn, when the select committee, which is inquiring into his dismissal from the position of supervising engineer at the Kalgoorlie end of the transcontinental railway, resumed its sittings to-day.

Senator De Largie presided.

Senator Bakhap pointed out that the protests raised by him and Senator Blakey against Mr. Starke's examination being restricted were not recorded in Hansard.

The chairman agreed, but said the minutes of the secretary of the committee included the protests.

Continuing his examination, Mr. Starke read letters and telegrams which were forwarded to Mr. Chinn in May, June, and July by the Secretary to the Home Affairs Department and Mr. Deane, telling Mr. Chinn that he must forward weekly reports and keep the engineer in chief continually advised. Nothing had been received for three months. If Mr. Chinn had insufficient assistance he was told to apply for more. The complaint against Mr. Chinn, said Mr. Starke, was that he sent Mr. Deane no copies of surveys or plans for three months. Mr. Chinn apparently did nothing.

Mr. Chinn: I wrote over 500 letters.

Mr. Starke: Well we shall see what you did.

Mr. Chinn: Mr. Deane did not do his duty in keeping me without assistance.

Mr. Starke: Did you, from the time you arrived at Kalgoorlie in February until July 21, send Mr. Deane field notes of any survey work or plottings.

Mr. Chinn: I cannot recollect. You see I was dismissed at a moment's notice, in order that I could not get access to documents

EMPIRE VISITORS.

ON NORTH COAST.

RECEPTION AT CASINO.

A CIVIC BANQUET.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.)

CASINO, Friday.

The British Parliamentarians, who are touring the North Coast, arrived at Casino to-day. When the cars drew up one by one, the town band struck up Rule Britannia, to the strains of which the visitors listened bareheaded. The visitors were met and welcomed by the Mayor, Ald. Mortimer, and Mr. Le Cope, secretary of the Reception Committee. Lord Emmott, Mr. D. R. Hall (Minister for Justice), Mr. Lough, and Mr Will Crooks inspected the parade of school children.

Lord Emmott, in a pleasant address, thanked the children for their reception, and said they were glad to see the boys and girls of Casino looking so bonny. Some of them would have votes later on. "We don't," said Lord Emmott, smiling, "have votes for women in England. It remains to be seen if you had votes how you would record them to-day. How many of you would like a half holiday to-day." Here three was unanimous waving of right hands.

Cheers were then given for Lord Emmott, Mr. Hall, and Mayor, by the children in hearty school fashion. The party then proceeded to the Masonic hall, where a civic banquet was tendered to the visitors.

There was a very large representative and fashionable gathering.

The Mayor, who presided, proposed the loyal toast of "Our Guests," the latter being supported by Mr. C. A. Lee, M.L.A., State member for the district. The gathering was one of the most brilliant yet held at Casino.

Lord Emmott addressed the children, and Mr. D. R. Hall, Minister for Justice, granted them a half holiday. Cheers were given for Lord Emmott, Mr. Hall, and the Mayor. Amongst the visitors was Mr. A. Fisher, ex-Prime Minister. Prior to the luncheon, the Mayor and Mayoress held a reception and introduced the leading people of the district to the visitors. The tables at the luncheon were decorated most beautifully by Mesdames F. G. Fanning, R. S. Lowe, C. S. Mortimer, and Miss Craig. At luncheon the Mayor presided. He had on his right Lord Emmott, and on his left Lord Sheffield.

The Mayor, in proposing "Our Guests," expressed the delight the people of the district felt at having such a distinguished party in their midst. He felt that he was only echoing the voice of the whole people of Australia when he said they were glad to see them in their midst. The visit would create a tie between Australia and the Mother Country which he hoped would be so powerful and strong as never to be broken.

Mr. C. A. Lee supported the toast. He said that in common with all Australians of various political views they recognised the visit as one of great importance. He welcomed the visitors most heartily because they had undertaken work of great magnitude at personal inconvenience. They had come to make Australia so as to be attached to the Mother Land. He was glad to see so many ladies present. He hoped the visit would satisfy the great minds of the Mother Parliament and country as to what Australia was doing for the Empire.

Lord Emmott made a brief response of thanks for "the unbounded hospitality and loyalty which was characteristic of Australia."

Mr. Thomas Lough also responded. The chief object of the tour, he said, was to destroy illusions that existed. They wanted to draw the people closer together. He prophesied a great future for Australia which was a grand country, full of wealth and prosperity. Australians could rely on every help possible from the members of the party. They must quicken up because of communication by steam, also by a cheaper system of cables.

The party left by motor for Lismore, en route to Byron Bay, at 3 p.m.

THE OVERLAND JOURNEY.

GLORY OF THE WATTLE.

CASINO, Friday.

The British Parliamentary delegation arrived at Casino at 2 o'clock this afternoon, after motoring from New England. The party, accompanied by Mr. C. A. Lee, M.L.A., were accommodated in nine motor cars. The tour being under the direction of Mr. C. Cormack, of the Government Tourist Bureau, and the Premier's Department.

After arriving at Tenterfield this morning, Lord Emmott personally conveyed, through Mr. Cormack, his appreciation of travelling arrangements made on the railway journey from Sydney.

ACROSS THE RANGE.

The overland journey from New England to the North Coast also gave the visitors an opportunity of viewing one of the most rugged corners of the State. It is 86 miles from Tenterfield to Casino, and the route winds over mountains and valleys for nearly the whole distance. The road drops from the high crest of the Great Dividing Range almost to the sea level, and gave a revelation of the diversity of the climate. The sun rose out of the east upon the frost-covered hills of New England, and when the cavalcade of cars started out from Tenterfield upon the white road leading to the coast, there was still a "tang," a healthy freshness, in the morning air. Down on the coast there was the warmth of summer, which contrasted strangely with the bracing breezes on the tableland. This sudden change, in a few hours' journey struck the visitors as remarkable, and the transformation in the character of the country passed through was no less interesting.

For the first 20 miles the road winds through New England pasture land, with here and there a selector's home and white dotted sheep. After that there is rapid descent down the mountain side, the road dropping lower at each turn. Some of the turns were startlingly sudden, and, as one car raced down one side of the hill another could be seen travelling in quite the opposite direction lower down the hillside. A sharp turn in the road disclosed the great mountain summit towering above the road, but separated by an immense chasm a thousand feet deep, the bottom and sides of which were hidden from view by a dark forest of tall trees and riotous tangle of undergrowth.

THE MUSHROOM ROCK.

The most remarkable thing of all, however, is "The Mushroom Rock," a geological freak, which is a landmark for 30 miles around. This is a huge rock shaped exactly like a mushroom set amidst a mass of equally gigantic rocks on the very pinnacle of the highest mountain. Hereabouts it stands clear cut against the skyline, and might well have been used as a retreat for bushrangers in the old days. As a matter of fact, it is often called "Wellington's Lookout." The sight of it recalled to the minds of several of the English visitors the fanciful story of Mr. H. G. Wells, "The Food of the Gods."

Later on the cars drew up, one by one, at the little mining township of Drake, where the entire populace turned out to catch a glimpse of the distinguished party.

After 20 miles or so of travelling down the south hillsides, Tabulam was passed. The crossing of Richmond River gave the visitors their first glimpses of the North Coast scrub. The road winds over a steep hill covered with virgin scrub, the beautiful soft-wood trees being festooned with giant creepers, and the dainty perfumed clematis. The noble North Coast pine reared its massive head above the luxurious tangle of scrub, and when the summit was reached this elegant tree could be seen silhouetted against the sky on all the neighbouring mountains. A clearing in the dense scrub revealed the primitive dwelling of a pioneer settler, who, having subdivided the forest, was for a time taking breath before planting it out.

GOLDEN GLOW OF WATTLE.

An upper reach of the Clarence River was crossed by the blue bridge, and later on the Richmond River was crossed. All along the route there had been the golden glow of the wattle, which is now at its best in New England, and the visitors were as much impressed with its brilliant show as with any other feature of the flying tour. For some miles before reaching Casino the party travelled through the rich pastures of Upper Richmond, where sleek dairy cattle were feeding on succulent grasses.

RECEPTION AT LISMORE.

PREMIER NORTH-COAST CITY.

LISMORE, Friday.

Immediately after the banquet at Casino the touring Parliamentary delegation and other visitors resumed their journey. A mechanical mishap to one of the cars caused it to be left behind, and its passengers were transferred to another car. The twenty-mile trip to Lismore was full of interest, the road leading through succulent pastures and over hills, upon which was left the remnant of the big scrub for which the district was at one time famous. The visitors expressed surprise that this land, now cleared, and bearing rich pasture, could have been covered with dense scrub less than 25 years ago. Fat beef and dairy cattle were seen grazing in broad paddocks, and pastoral prosperity was in evidence on every hand. The party arrived at Lismore station at half-past 4, and were met by the Mayor (Alderman Spinks) and the town clerk. Strange to say, Lismore was left out of the itinerary, but this was on account of the small amount of time at the disposal of the party, who were, of course, made aware of the fact that Lismore had the proud reputation of being the premier city of the North Coast, both in regard to wealth and population.

The Mayor in a short address regretted that the party of distinguished visitors were unable to stay in Lismore, and that they appreciated the compliment which had been paid them in calling at that town. He trusted that their visit would be pleasant, and beneficial to both Australia and the Empire generally.

Lord Emmott said, in reply, that they felt greatly honoured by the Mayor in welcoming them on behalf of the city of Lismore. They knew that Lismore had made great progress both in commerce and in municipal enterprise. They were also doing great work in developing the dairying industry, and their exports of butter had increased enormously. Butter was an article they could supply, and England could consume in large quantities. He would like to express the pleasure they felt even in the short view they had had of the town.

AT BYRON BAY.

INSPECTION OF LOCAL FACTORIES.

BYRON BAY, Friday.

The party travelled by train to Byron Bay, passing through the cream of the dairying districts. Just at dusk the train reached the pinnacle of the coastal hills, and the party obtained their first view of the broad Pacific. In a few minutes the train had pulled up at the siding of the Byron Bay Co-operative Company's factory. Here the party were entertained hospitably by the management, who were represented by the chairman of directors, Mr. F. Reading, the general manager, Mr. W. Brandau, and the secretary, Mr. W. Clifford. Subsequently Mr. Reading extended a hearty welcome to the visitors. He said he was proud of the place taken by their company. They boasted that they were the largest co-operative butter manufacturing company in the world.

Lord Emmott, in reply, desired to thank them for the warm reception they had given the party. He did not know what price they got for their butter in the first year, but it seemed to him, from the balance-sheet, that it was very cheap. Perhaps they had given it away to establish a market. (Laughter.) They had a great output now, and got a good price, and he wished the company continued success.

Subsequently the whole party were shown over the factory, and had an opportunity of seeing the butter-making and testing-room machinery, packing, and also the bacon department. They then resumed their journey by train to Tweed Heads, where they were received at the station by the Mayor of Murwillumbah (Alderman M. G. Moriarty). The party was entertained at a luncheon provided to-night at Byron Bay by the directors of the N. C. Co-operative Company, Ltd.

NEW ENGLAND TO NORTH COAST.

TENTERFIELD, Friday.

The Parliamentary representatives arrived this morning about 7.30, the train having been delayed. They were entertained at breakfast by leading citizens. The Mayor briefly welcomed the visitors, regretting the shortness of their visit, which prevented the district being shown. He urged the necessity of immigrants to the Commonwealth, being of sober and thrifty habits. Lord Sheffield replied in jocular strain, that he feared Australian hospitality rendered the visitors unsuited as settlers, as their sobriety was in danger of being upset. The reception committee issued a souvenir pamphlet setting forth the capabilities of the New England district.

The party left by motors for Casino at 9 a.m., in glorious weather, five members remaining to go by the mail-train to Brisbane. Mr. Andrew Fisher, leader of the Federal Opposition, accompanied the party.

Upon receiving the definite refusal of the girls to adhere to the log rates for the tour, eight other girls were engaged.

Studd, a member of the British Olympic Games Committee, replying to the criticisms that have been passed in connection with the proposal to raise a fund of £100,000, states that the money will not be used to secure a team of gladiators, but to create an organisation to support amateur sports associations, and to organise and extend sports on scientific lines.

The British Olympic Committee has decided that Mr. H. D. M'Intosh's proposal to include the Dominions in the scope of the fund is impracticable, inasmuch as the international committee decided that the Dominions should compete separately.

C.E. UNION.

MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

WORLD'S CONVENTION.

At the afternoon session of the C.E. Convention yesterday a missionary conference was held.

Rev. R. J. Williams delivered an address entitled "Missionary Opportunities in Our Own State."

Rev. Chas. Whyte, M.A., read a paper on "Missionary Opportunity." He said that the world was open, as it had never been before. That gave them a unique opportunity of which they must take full advantage.

A number of addresses were delivered at the evening session, Rev. Wm. Allen presiding.

Rev. James Green spoke on the subject of "How the World may be Won for Christ." Primarily, one had to realise the magnitude of the task, and recognise that the world would never be won over by the employment of European and ministerial missionaries alone, but that a native church, supervised by native ministers, would have to be established. The speaker thought that another absolute necessity was united effort by every denomination. Overlapping and competition of every kind would have to be absolutely avoided. He contrasted the great success of the non-Christian natives with that of the white races.

Rev. S. Varcoe Cock gave some interesting details about the world's convention to be held in Sydney in 1914. The following centres are already promising to send delegations:—America, Germany, Madagascar, India, Japan, Burma, Africa, and England. Among those coming are:—Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., LL.D. (founder and world's president), Mrs. F. E. Clark, Dr. J. A. MacDonald (editor "Toronto Globe"), Mr. John R. Clements (president New York State Union), Rev. Toki Ouki Ozada (president Japanese Union). The huge Missionary Exhibition will be an outstanding feature of the convention. The delegates will represent four million Endeavourers from 60 different countries, and of 80 different denominations.

Rev. F. C. Hall (state superintendent missionary work) also spoke.

FEDERAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MELBOURNE, Friday.

CAMPAIGN EXPENSES.

Mr. Thomas (N.S.W.) asked the Prime Minister if, in view of the fact that the Electoral Act only allowed a candidate to spend £100 on his election, he would look into the statement made by Mr. Anstey to the effect that Mr. Brooks had sent £500 to Mr. Fowler, M.P.

Mr. Fowler (W.A.), in the course of a personal statement said that the money was remitted to him for the Liberal organisation in Western Australia. The money was the result of an appeal made to several persons in Melbourne who were interested in Western Australia. This was a fair indication that, of the thousands which were supposed to have been contributed to the party by trusts and combines, very little reached his State.

THE ELECTORAL ACT.

Mr. Hughes asked the Attorney-General what had been done in connection with the prosecutions that were initiated for breaches of the Electoral Act. As far as he knew only one had been proceeded with, and this was against a little newspaper at Manly.

The Attorney-General said that the only way the prosecutions came before his department was for advice from the Home Affairs Department. He declined to say what advice he had given his colleagues. The first persons who would learn about the prosecutions would be those directly interested.

Mr. Hughes wanted to know what was being done in regard to the prosecution of the secretary of the Liberal Association in New South Wales.

The Attorney-General: The responsibility for carrying on these prosecutions rests with the Minister for Home Affairs.

Mr. Hughes: The prosecution was initiated by the Attorney-General. Will the Prime Minister supply the information with regard to the prosecution of Mr. Archdale Parkhill.

The Prime Minister: I don't know where the matter stands, and if you give notice of the question I will try and find out about it.

NORFOLK ISLAND.

The Minister for External Affairs gave notice that he would bring in a bill dealing with the taking over of Norfolk Island by the Commonwealth.

POSTAL ELECTRICIANS' AWARD.

The Postmaster-General said, in reply to questions, that it would be impossible to make the Arbitration Court award in respect to postal electricians retrospective.

The Prime Minister said that it was not the intention of the Government to bring down a motion to reject the award. The employees had been forced into the court against their will, and it would be an act of repudiation not to give them the benefit of the award.

The Treasurer moved the second reading of a bill to amend the Audit Act. He said that the bill would enable the Government to meet payments for the months of July on the same basis as of the estimates of the previous year. Any payments made would be included in the first supply bill brought in in the new financial year. At present the Treasury had no authority to make any payments after the close of the financial year. Power would also be given to regulate the purchase, custody, control, and issue of public stores. Under this bill, tender boards could be established to ensure economic purchase of stores.

The debate was adjourned till Tuesday.

BUREAU OF AGRICULTURE.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Cook, moved the second reading of the Bureau of Agriculture bill. He said the life of every country should be to foster its primary industries. Last year's exports totalled £76,000,000, and out of this 68 per cent. was of primary products. The world outside was looking for food and clothing. He said the bill was of great interest to everybody. It affected the States as well as the Commonwealth. There was a clear case to be made for a bureau, that would not clash with the work done by the States. His bill, which had been on the books for nine years, was one of the most important measures that could be brought before Parliament. Every State was specially interested in the eradication of pests. It had been agreed that a great deal of great interest took place in most of the States in putting down pests, and there was no denying that the Federal authorities could tackle the job much better. He believed the States were doing excellent work, but they were not doing the scientific laboratory work that the Commonwealth could do. The bureau would link up the practical departments of the States with the Commonwealth bureau. The bureau would supply information to anywhere or anybody. It would be an investigatory bureau, and would not come into conflict with the States. It could investigate the growing of those products on which bounties were paid.

Mr. Tudor (Vic.) said one of the late Governments, without any bill like this engaged Mr. McAlpine, at the request of all the Agricultural Departments of Australia, to investigate bitter pit. It also engaged Professor Gilruth to report on worm nodules in beef. The Commonwealth had power to carry out investigations already beyond this bill. Something ought to be said by the Government as to what the scheme would cost.

The debate adjourned at 3.30 p.m. till Tuesday next.

SHOP STRIKE.

UNIONS RAISING FUNDS.

BROKEN HILL, Friday.

The Wages Board continued its inquiry last night. A number of employees gave evidence claiming the £4 minimum wage. The board adjourned until 8.30 to-night.

The Co-operative Society met last night, and decided to pay the revised log. Several more unions have voted levies for the strikers. The Shop Assistants' Association last night struck a levy on the members of the association of 10s per week for males, 5s for females, and 2s 6d to 3s 6d for juniors.

At the meeting of the Co-operative Society the secretary, Mr. E. J. Polkinghorn, said that business had been very satisfactory. The year ended with a bank debt of £1141, which was converted into a credit of £151. Sales amounted to £39,669, as against £36,782 for the previous half-year. Later on the secretary stated that the society was at a critical juncture in the uphill fight, and there was a great deal of bitterness. Many rumours had been circulated concerning himself and the position of the society, which could never become insolvent as long as its shareholders stuck loyally to it.

PUBLIC SERVICE.

QUESTION OF SUPERANNUATION.

The annual meeting of the Professional Officers' Association of the New South Wales Department of Public Works was held at Aaron's Exchange Hotel last night. Mr. T. Kennedy presided. The annual report referred to the work of the council in the matter of superannuation. The Public Service Association had been approached, and had urged that definite decision with regard to the subject be arrived at, so that the Government might deal with the question before the expiration of the present Parliament. Representations urging an early establishment of a superannuation fund, were also made by the council to the Minister for Justice. The council was of opinion that the establishment of a superannuation scheme was of such paramount importance to the service that no effort should be spared to secure legislative enactment of a fund during the present Parliament. The council trusted that, under the latest provisions of the Government's superannuation measure, not yet made public, the claims of the older officers to special treatment would be fully recognised. The report and the balance-sheet, which latter showed a credit of £56 1s 9d, were adopted.

The ballot for members of the council resulted in the election of the following members:—Engineering section, Messrs. J. W. Roberts, E. M. Allman, R. S. Little John, E. R. Cambridge, C. W. King, and R. Y. Smith. Survey section, Messrs. T. Kennedy, A. L. Lloyd, J. S. Robyns, C. F. Paterson, and T. G. Wilson. Architectural section, Messrs. J. Barr, A. H. Prendergast, W. Mitchell, H. F. Grove, and P. J. A. Bloomfield.

RYDE SELECTION.

MR. THOMPSON RECOMMENDED.

ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES.

Mr. R. M. Pontey presided over a meeting of the Ryde electorate conference at Hornsby last evening. It was agreed that the name of Mr. W. Thompson, who topped the recent selection poll by 142 votes, should be forwarded to the council of the Liberal Association as a selected candidate.

The report of the executive stated that in accordance with a resolution adopted at the meeting of the conference on August 20, in connection with several alleged irregularities, it conducted an inquiry and found that 5030 ballot papers were printed, 4262 were posted to members, two were cancelled, and 376 were in the hands of the returning officer. The number received at the count was 3942, the returning officer had received 86, said to have been delivered at the Liberal rooms by the postal officials since the count, 24 had been returned as undelivered and 84 had been received since the count. The number unaccounted for was 823. The whole of the signatures to votes recorded had been carefully checked with the branch rolls, and they found 68 signed ballot slips bearing names which were not on any of the branch lists, and to whom ballot papers were not posted. They had received statutory declarations from persons who declared that they had received ballot papers and posted them in sufficient time. None of those names were among those who voted.

The returning officer had received a letter from the secretary of the Ryde branch, stating he had been informed that about 40 members of the Labour League at Ryde and Gladesville had been enrolled as members of those branches of the Liberal Association.

The chairman said he reported to Mr. Wade that about 17 Waverley ballot-papers had got mixed up with the Ryde papers. In one instance it appeared that two votes had been put in for one person.

A letter was read from Mr. Wade, stating that once the count had been made the name of the selected candidate should be forwarded to the council. The statements regarding the ballot papers indicated carelessness or apathy.

Mr. Wright moved that, in view of the gross irregularities revealed by the report of the committee appointed by the conference to investigate the circumstances surrounding the recent ballot, it be recommended that the ballot be declared null and void.

Mr. P. C. Law: The motion is absolutely frivolous. I am utterly opposed to upsetting the ballot because a few supporters of a candidate want the election over again.

Mr. T. Rolin moved, as an amendment that the name of Mr. Thompson be forwarded to the council as a selected candidate. The ballot, he said, was fairly and properly taken, and it was a reflection on the chairman if it were otherwise. If Mr. Anderson and Mr. Allard, defeated candidates, chose to appeal, they should go to the council. The most they had heard was that a number of ballot papers had not been returned. Even making all such allowances, Mr. Thompson had a majority despite a few irregularities.

A voice: Gross irregularities.

Mr. Rolin: Small irregularities.

Dr. Hodgson seconded the amendment, which was adopted by 32 to 29 amidst cheers.

The Maranoa left Sydney on Monday, August 25, and on the following Thursday night Anderson was discovered in the lavatory in the act of cutting his throat with a razor. He inflicted a severe wound, and died about 10 minutes afterwards. The steamer was then about 60 miles from the New Zealand coast. On arrival at Auckland an inquest was held, at which evidence was given by otherstewards to the effect that deceased had had a severe fall on the first day out from Sydney, and had injured one of his eyes badly, and apparently affected his mind. A verdict of suicide while of unsound mind was recorded.

SPORTING.

THE TURF.

Horseracing at Warwick Farm and pony and galloway racing at Ascot claim the attention of metropolitan sporting folk this afternoon, while those who prefer to go further afield will be catered for at the September meeting of the Newcastle Jockey Club; the Victoria Amateur Turf Club holds its September meeting at Caulfield; Adelaide racegoers are provided with an outing by South Australian Tattersall's Club; the September reunion of the Queensland Turf Club takes place at Eagle Farm; and the annual meeting of the Kalgoorlie (W.A.) Racing Club will be brought to a close.

The September meeting of the Warwick Farm Racing Club takes place this afternoon on the well-appointed racecourse adjacent to George's River, and the programme for the occasion should attract a large assemblage, for included in the entries for several of the events are horses holding important spring engagements. The track is reported to be first-class going, and the management has, in the catering and other departments, made due provision for a large muster of sporting folk. The transit arrangements by rail include special trains starting from the Central Railway Station at 11.40 a.m. (horses and attendants), 12.7, 12.32, 12.40, 12.51, 12.56, 1.8, and 1.20 p.m., of which the 12.7 and 12.22 p.m. will stop at Granville, the 12.51, 1.8, and 1.20 p.m. at Strathfield and Granville, and the 12.26 p.m. at Fairfield to pick up passengers. The sport commences at 2.10 p.m. with the Hurdle Race, in which the places may be filled by Helenus, Floating, and Don Quevedo, Yavaul, Pomona, and Miss Mooltan may pass the judge in order for the Farm Stakes, and the honours in the Liverpool Mile may be divided by Grafboline, Embracer, and Salarino. Karool, Lord Castlereagh, and Purita may occupy the situations in the Three-years-old Handicap; Sir Alwynton, Irish Figure, and Firm may pass the post as named in the Warwick Handicap, while Hot Air, Boomalli, and Yarrum may fight out the battle for the Pace Welter.

Patrons of pony and galloway racing are catered for this afternoon by the Ascot Racing Club, and the programme foreshadows interesting sport. The track is reported to be first-class going, and ample provision has been made in all departments for a large gathering. The transit arrangements include special trams, landing visitors at the racecourse gates, while the ordinary service to-day will also be available. The first race is timed to start at 2 p.m., and the results of the racing may be anticipated as under:—Novice Handicap: Lady Canada, Daceyville, Contrive. Flying Handicap: Lady Blue, Lorely, Mosquito. Fourteen-one Handicap: Realm, Thea Merry, Miss Carbeau. Approved Stakes: Ridiculous, Moorefield Lad, Sea Lark. Fourteen Hands Handicap: Honeymoon, Lady Fairy, Red Gipsy. Fourteen-two Handicap: Roma, Master Dix, Miss Field. Ascot Handicap: Playtile, The Artist, Arilian.

The programme of five events to be played out this afternoon under the auspices of the Newcastle Jockey Club promises highly interesting sport, and Metropolitan racegoers intending to make the trip will be in ample time by the trains leaving the Central Railway Station at 6.45, 7.55, and 9.10 a.m., returning by the fast train which leaves Newcastle for the Metropolis at 5.20 p.m., or the ordinary starting at 6.50 p.m. A special service of trams will run between the Newcastle Railway Station and the racecourse.

The principal long distance race on the flat at Caulfield to-day is the Heatherlie Handicap, run over nine furlongs, and among the horses engaged are Captain White, 9st 11lb; Midnight Sun, 8st 13lb; Mountain Princess, 8st 11lb; Barlos, 8st 11lb; Two Ales, 8st 5lb; Ferandez, 8st 11lb; Flaith, 8st 11lb; Anna Carlovna, 8st 11lb; Prince Aurate, 7st 13lb; Avonwort, 7st 13lb; and other candidates for the big handicaps. Mr. Mason, on behalf of the New Zealand Rugby Union, congratulated the team on continued improvement in form.

Mr. Galbraith on behalf of the management committee of the New Zealand Rugby Union, congratulated the teams on their fight for the Rugby game in New South Wales

Mr. C. E. Morgan, manager of the Australian team, said they had players equal to any they had in the old days, and a team could be picked out of the visiting footballers to beat any league team that could be put in the field to-day. RUGBY LEAGUE.

CHARITY SATURDAY.

CITY CUP FINAL.

The meeting of North Sydney and Glebe in the City Cup final to-day at the Sydney Cricket Ground will ring down the curtain for the 1913 season. The charge to the public for admission to the ground will be one shilling. One-half of the "gate" will be allotted to the League's Assurance Fund and various charitable institutions; whilst the other half is to be set aside as a benefit to five of the pioneers of the Northern Union movement in the three-quarter line, and Gray in the forwards; whilst M'Fariane will take up his old position behind North Sydney's pack. The players having returned from the Queensland tour, no doubt, for these alterations in the teams, the Northerners' chances must be considered particularly bright. Their young players are a speedy lot, energetic to a degree, and clever handlers, and with the ability to harmonise excellently when the favours of the game are running their way. However, a great deal depends on who will win the toss. If most responsible for the selection, we should like Glebe success in this department, then the M'Rivat—Thiering combination would not spring any great surprise if they were to reproduce the form which marked the Glebe display in the match which brought the victory over the premiers in the last fixture of the competition.

The big match will be preceded by the second-grade final, for the Sports Ground Cup, between Balmain II. and Glebe II. Following are the particulars:—

First-grade, City Cup.

North Sydney v Glebe, 3.30 (Mr. T. M'Mahon).

Second-grade, Sports Ground Cup.

Balmain II. v Glebe II., 2 p.m. (Mr. C. Hedley).

BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

THE GARDINER CUP MATCHES.

To-day's Cup matches at Epping are determinants for the corresponding pair of semi-finals to Newtown and Granville, and a replays of the fixtures which were abruptly terminated last Saturday owing to darkness setting in. Consequently, exciting matches should be witnessed. Although it will be able to draw comparisons and subsequent conclusions of the styles of the several custodians engaged, particularly of Aldred and Lowe, the first Sports League game on the Sydney Cricket Ground has all the essentials of a final, as a win by either team means much in the semi-finals, where one point separates the four contestants. Balmain have secret Drummoyne in the final of the Reserve Second League, and the final for the juvenile competition for the Richardson Challenge Cup and medals has reached the semi-final stage, and two very interesting games (West Wallsend, a competitor in one) are listed for Birchgrove. The first round for the Schools' District Championship (contested on the knock-out system) will bring Newcastle and South Coast, likewise Granville and High Schools' Leagues into opposition at Sydney Cricket Ground Oval, and Clyde respectively. The Mosman Club which is in the second year of its existence will masthead the Junior Pennant to-day at the Club House, Mosman Bay. TRADES AND LABOUR.

LABOUR FEDERATION.

There are not unanimous in accepting the decision of the Labour Federation of New South Wales that the first annual congress of which will take place at the Trades Hall on October 1.

On Saturday night the Electrical Trades Union declined to join. According to Mr. D. Hall, the secretary, this union was not opposed in the idea of a federation of labour, but was in favour the existence of two executives—the Labour Council and the Federation. He did not see that any good purpose would be served by giving to a federation the right to call unions out on strike without reserving the right of control over any of the individual unions who might see fit to precipitate industrial trouble.

BACK TO THE OLD NAME.

The Transport Workers' Federation has decided to revert to the old name—the Amalgamated Railway and Tramway Services Association. The change is to be given effect to immediately.

RAILWAY APPEALS BILL.

The general secretary of the Amalgamated Railway and Tramway Service Association is arranging a deputation to the Minister for Railways, Mr. Cann, to protest against the acceptance by the Assembly of certain amendments introduced by the Legislative Council into the Railway Appeals Board Bill.

EIGHT-HOUR BOYCOTT.

At a meeting of the city branch of the Waiters and General Labourers' Association, it was decided to endorse the action of the general executive in regard to the refusal of the Eight-hour Demonstration Committee, to grant affiliation to this body. The meeting considered that under no circumstances members of the city branch should be asked not to buy tickets or take part in the demonstration. It was suggested that the association hold a harbour picnic to celebrate Eight-hour Day.

GOVERNMENT SERVICE AND AWARDS.

A deputation of representatives of the Permanent Way branch of the Railway Workers' and General Labourers' Association, along with the executive of the association, has been appointed to wait upon the Minister for Labour and Industry, and request him to pass a declaration Act, defining the meaning and intention of clause 26 of the Industrial Arbitration Act. This clause is the one which says Government departments must pay the rate of wages fixed by the various boards for workers outside doing similar work.

WAGGON WORKERS.

The Amalgamated Coachmakers' Society has decided to ask for a variation of its award covering men engaged at the Central Railway Station, in connection with the inspection and repair work of carriages and waggons. The hours of labour have been changed, and it is proposed to ask for payment at overtime rates for all work done after 4 p.m.

LABOURERS' LOG.

Application is about to be made to have the Labourers' award of August 12 amended, so as to include many other workers not therein specified. Per bush workers at present asked vary from 1s 6½d to 1s 8d; for unskilled drainers, 2s; for men assisting licensed drainers, 1s 6d; for pile driving, 1s 8d to 1s 9d; for road work, 1s 6d to 2s 2d; and for cable section, 1s 6d to 2s 8d.

ROTATION SYSTEM ABANDONED.

QUEENSLAND CARRIERS AND SHEARERS.

The Pastoralists' Union of New South Wales has received a telegram from the Longreach branch of the United Pastoralists' Association of Queensland, stating that at a meeting of carriers and the Australian Workers' Union, held at Longreach, on Thursday night, it was decided to drop the rotation system of loading. Carriers were individually approached yesterday morning to load all they could for loading, and shearers were applying and signing on for pens unconditionally.

MORE PAY DEMANDED.

BALLINA, Friday.

The labourers at Broadwater mill have lodged a protest against the existing rates of pay for handling shipping cargoes at the wharf. They have demanded that in future the rates be as follows:—For loading sugar or unloading coal or any other cargo, is an hour, and is 3d per hour overtime over eight hours.

Mr. John Parry, Comptroller of Stores, Railway Department, who has been in indifferent health for some time past, has entered upon three months' leave of absence.

WOMEN SUFFRAGE.

MINORITY OF MILITANTS.

Mr. John Simpson, who is secretary of the Men's League for Women's Suffrage in England, arrived in Sydney last week, and is to address a series of meetings. The Earl of Lytton is president of the body, which Mr. Simpson says, has a very influential executive and a very large membership.

Mr. Simpson said that the society was not militant, its objects being to secure the enfranchisement of women in the same way as men. Although the league itself consists of men some of whom support and others of whom oppose militancy the policy and activities have always been of an entirely constitutional character. They believed in the enfranchisement of women not only from a woman's point of view, but because they believed that the enormous influence which women had been making into both social and political life demanded that politicians should be responsible to the women of the country in matters of legislation which so vitally affected their interests.

"It is perhaps difficult," continued Mr. Simpson, "for Australians to realise the comparatively insignificant position which militancy occupies in the fight for women's suffrage in England. There are altogether about 35 organisations, whose objects are the same as my own society's, and of these, the Women's Social and Political Union is the only one which has ever engaged in or advocated the destruction of property. The membership of this society cannot exceed 10 per cent. of the total number of women involved. Its membership and income are decreasing and I think I may fairly say that militancy is on the wane."

MACHINERY.

ECONOMY IN RELATION TO MACHINERY—

Have you ever thought about it? Or are you one of those who pin their faith to the "buying-in-the-cheapest-market" theory?

The average man knows that quality is never cheap. But it may be economical for all that. You pay a decent price for a suit of clothes because you know a cheap suit is dear at any price. Buy your machinery in the same way, and you're on the safe side.

Economy in relation to Machinery means getting the best for your money. More than that. It means making an outlay that will permit faster working, less waste, and bigger profits. ANY expenditure is economical if it more than pays for itself in increased business.

We mention these facts because we sell Machinery that is economical. We do not appeal on the basis of "cheapness," but if you want fast, modern, make-more-money tools at a fair price, you'll appreciate our lines. They include everything for the General Engineer. A wide range is stocked, and full facilities for thorough inspection given.

Getting the best isn't always a matter of price, of course. There's something in being shrewd enough to look closely into the proposition, and have superiority absolutely demonstrated. That's the selling argument we mostly rely on to make our sales. And that's why our customers are also our good friends. What we say IS so.

GENERAL STORAGE BATTERY CAR CO., LTD., (IN LIQUIDATION).

Tenders are invited for the undermentioned Assets:—
One 5-ton Lansden Electric Motor Lorry.
One 3-ton Lansden Electric Motor Lorry.
One 1-ton Lansden Electric Motor Lorry.
One Anderson Electric Motor Car.
Two Motor Boats, Speedplanes, Rainbow and Peerless.
The Cars and Boats may be inspected by arrangement with the undersigned.
An exceptional opportunity is presented to obtain at a very low price the latest thing in Motor Traction. The Cars and Lorries offered are samples, well equipped, and fitted with the noted Edison Storage Battery. Experts are unanimous in their praise of these batteries, and express the opinion that at no very distant date the present petrol-driven cars will be superseded by the electric cars. Their success has been amply proven in the United States, and they must certainly, in the immediate future, become very popular. The running costs are considerably lower than the petrol engine, by reason of the cheap cost of electric charging, and the freedom from excessive wear and tear. They are noted for their smooth running and the absence of vibration.
The Motor Boats advertised are the well-known Hydroplanes Peerless and Rainbow, each of which is capable of very high speed, fitted with the celebrated Elco Gasoline Engine, and up-to-date in every respect. They are specially commended to gentlemen interested in aquatics. Tenders close with the undersigned on September, 20th next, from whom full particulars may be obtained.

HOW TO REMOVE FRECKLES AND BLOTCHES.

FAIR COMPLEXIONS freckle very easily, but they can be quickly removed and prevented by following these directions:—

Get some Puritaol Wax from the chemist or draper, and apply at night, washing off in the morning with warm water and soap. Then lap a little cold water ten times upon the face with the hands, allowing it to get thoroughly round the closed eyes. The treatment should be followed out in every detail to ensure success. Any chemist will supply you with the Puritaol Wax. See that you get the right kind. It will not injure the most delicate skin.
